The rain, which had been threatening since noon, began to fall when the comrades marched into the hall, and continued in little showers during the rest of the day, making it disagreeable for those in the ranks and on the streets, but for all that, large crowds of people went to the different yards to witness the G. A. R. services held in each yard. The flowers and potted plants, used this year were furnished from the greenhouses of Orlando Newhall in South Peabody. The ranks of the veterans are rapidly thinning out, many of the members of the Post, being unable to turn out by reason of sickness, and others not feeling able to stand the long march from the different cemeteries, while every year many answer to the roll call of the silent army of dead but not forgotten heroes, and the time is not far distant when the observance of the day will be left with the Ladies' Relief Corps, Sons of Veterans and the patriotic citizens of the Union which was saved by those who

SOUTH PEABODY.

J. W. Curtis, of this town, is very sick, in Keene, N. H.

The residence of William H. Brown, is receiving a coat of paint, at the hands of William Blaney.

The concert of war songs given at the church vestry Thursday evening, was very well received by the large audience present. The singing of the song, "Tenting To-night" by Mrs. Brown and Oliver, was highly spoken of. The Lynn orchestra rendered some fine selections during the evening. About eighteen dollars was netted for the society.

A petition is in circulation to be presented to the Selectmen, for them to grant five hundred dollars more to carry on the good work which has been begun on Lynn street. The road above I. H Beedes' to S. K. Newhall's is in a very bad condition and should be remedied right away.

Mr. George Larrabee, formerly of this place, but lately of Lynn, started for Flordia to-day, with his family. It is his intention to settle in that state.

In justice to the teachers of the Rockville School, we are requested to state that the accident which occurred to the little boy of Mr. and Mrs. Leighton, did not happen during school hours, as some of the local papers have stated, but was done nearly half a mile from the school house.

The display of flowers in Cedar Grove Cemetery, was better last Saturday, than ever before since the opening of the grove.

The fruit trees in this section of the town have a more extensive blossom than for many years, and bids fair for a good crop.

The water in Brown's Pond is as high as last year, and the houses of Mr. N. Batchelder are flooded in the rear.

There is a very large camp of gipsies at Brown's pond, larger than ever before. "The woods are full of 'em."

The funeral of Wilbur Leighton, occurred from his parents' residence, on Washington street last Thursday.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

The second game in the series between the Peabodys and Somervilles was played at the rink last evening and resulted in a victory for the Somervilles, three to two goals. Felton got the first rush and Bickford got the last four. The first, fourth and fifth goals were won by the Somervilles in 15 s., 8 s. and 9 m., respectively. The second and third were won by the Peabodys in 1 m. 10 s. and 3 m. 10 s., respectively. The fifth and deciding goal was given to the Somervilles on fouls, two having been made by the Peabodys, when Morrill in stopping a ball got nearly down on his knees, which the referee, C. H. Symonds, decided was a foul, and gave the game to the visitors. This decision was received with hisses and hoots, but did not change the decision. An exhibition goal was started but was not finished. The Peabodys outplayed the Somervilles who were strengthened by the addition of Goulding. The next game will be played Tuesday evening, June 9th, and this will be the deciding game for the purse of $75.

SPARKS.

Monday evening at 7.05 o'clock, an alarm was given for a fire on the roof of the building on Railroad Avenue, occupied by Edward Jackman as a morocco shop. The fire was discovered and the alarm given by the telegraph operator at the Boston & Maine depot. The firemen with the apparatus were soon on the spot and the flames extinguished with a trifling loss. Hose 1 and Steamer 2 set at the hydrant at the corner of Walnut and Central streets and Hose 2 and 3 attached lines to the steamer. Water was let on but shut off before it did any damage to the stock. One piece of the suction hose of the steamer was burst by the force of the water. This piece has been in service ever since the engine came to town. Fred B. Thomas, foreman of Hose 1, received a bad cut on one hand while working at the fire. Hose 1 went out first followed by the Steamer and the H. & L. The whole department turned out. Had the gentleman who gave the alarm stated what building was on fire, there would have been no occasion to have rung an alarm, as a line of hose could have been run from the hydrant in front of the engine house, through the sheds at the rear of the stables, directly on to the building, as there were men enough in the house. Pepper's dog ran to the engine house as soon as the alarm was given, and assisted in getting the apparatus out, and then kept with the firemen until the apparatus was housed again. The 7.08 train was delayed about fifteen minutes by hose across the track. Hose 2 were ordered out for practice Monday evening, but they got it before the time. The new horse of Hose 1 worked like an old veteran, and ran like a deer.

At the meeting of Steamer 2 held Monday evening, it was voted to extend a vote of thanks to George A. Voorhees for the present of a pair of panel pictures.

The Salem Firemen's Relief Association have elected the following officers for the ensuing year:—President, John T. Lovett; Vice President, William O. Arnold; Secretary, John Wilson; Treasurer, George P. Woodbury, and eleven Directors from the different organizations. Charles S. Rodgers was expelled from the Association for dishonesty and breach of trust. He had obtained over $100, for the sale of ball tickets, which he never handed over to the treasurer.

At the Turners Falls fire district meeting the sum of $2,500 was appropriated for its maintainance for the coming year. John Jamison was elected chief of department; Danforth F. Ripley, James C. Collins, John Donovan and W. A. Herbert, assistants. The department consists of one hand engine, the once somewhat famous Torrent No. 3 of Peabody.—Boston Sunday Times.

Meeting of the Board of Engineers this evening.

The following from the Malden Mirror, would be a good idea in this department: The four protective rubber covers recently purchased for the fire department are a valuable acquisition to the firemen's facilities for saving property. They are black on one side and white on the other, 12 feet by 18, with rings for fastening them. One of them will nicely cover a piano. In case of fire in a store or dwelling the timely use of these covers will save much valuable property from damage and perhaps ruin by water.

The time for the payment of dues of the Relief Association, runs out on the 15th of this month. Those who have not paid up should attend to it.

Assistant Engineer, John H. Tibbetts, is about to remove to Salem, and consequently resign from the Board of Engineers. The department will lose an efficient officer and fireman by his withdrawal, and the town a good citizen. Several firemen have already been mentioned in connection with the position. Z.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Friday morning, after many postponements and delays, William Hayes was called for sentence in the Superior Court, Chief Justice Brigham, presiding. The particulars of the crime for which he was sentenced, are too well known to the readers of the Press, to call for a repetition. Shortly after the court had opened, "Billie" was brought in by a deputy sheriff, followed by a large crowd. He was dressed neatly as usual and during the trial of a liquor case sat fanning himself with his hat. Hayes was soon called by the Judge for sentence. Northend, one of Hayes counsel, had nothing to say, but Mr. Knox said "that it was quite evident Mr. Hayes, who has for several years used atlas powder, knew that the damage done would be very slight, and I submit to your honor that the charge appears greater than it really was. He should be sentenced for an attempt with a substance, the effect of which he knew. The kerosene had no effect and its being placed where it was, could only be accounted for by a mind clouded by drunkenness or idiocy." Hayes was shown to be an active business man, not a rumseller, but a stirring man who met all his business engagements, but when under the influence of liquor he might be quarrelsome. He owned considerable real estate and was a man whom confinement would be more than an ordinary punishment to. The District Attorney briefly related the particulars of the case. Chief Justice Brigham said "he had received a letter from Judge Pitman in which he concurred with the jury in the verdict of guilty of attempt to commit the crime. Such an attempt should be punished by the maliciousness of the attempt. He was not so clear but what defendant thought the combination with the kerosene, would not make it greater. It pointed directly to a design to burn. The impression he got from the evidence of Peabody parties at the previous hearing, was that Hayes was peaceable enough, if allowed to have his own way, but was revengeful when thwarted in any of his schemes, although I do not intend to sentence him as if he was a desperado, still I will not impose the sentence I should on a man who has heretofore been a respected law abiding citizen. Judge Pitman and I have concurred on the same sentence I would have given him had I sentenced him on the day he was brought up in Lawrence." The sentence was then written on the complaint and the Clerk of Courts read it, which was five years in States Prison at Charlestown, the first day to be solitary confinement. Hayes attempted to sit down several times during the reading but was ordered to stand. He was then handcuffed and taken to Jail, and at 12 o'clock was taken to Charlestown by Deputy Sheriff Merritt. Hayes took the sentence very quietly, but denounced his counsel roundly. The general feeling in this town is that the sentence was a very light one, and should have been fifteen years at the least.

The exhibition of writing and drawing will be held in the School Committee's room on June 17th and 20th P. M. It was voted to invite Miss M. O. Barrett and Messrs. Frank C. Merrill, and Eugene F. McCarthy to act as judges. It is expected that every class from the second primary up will take part in the exhibition, which will be simply an exhibition of the regular work of the schools. It was also voted to advertise for proposals for coal for the School Department. Dr. Foster was appointed on the sub-committee of the High and Centre Schools.

A two and one-half story dwelling house is being built on Aborn street.

Monday afternoon a little five year old daughter of Charles Symonds, the stable keeper, was thrown from an open buggy on Main street by the horse, which was running away, sheering suddenly. Mr. Symonds had alighted from his buggy at his residence on Washington street, and had put the little girl into the buggy to give her a short ride, when the horse started, throwing Mr. Symonds under the wheels. The horse then turned down Main street toward the square and the cause of his sheering was a laborer on the street waving his shovel at him. The child was taken up and carried into Dr. Weston's office, where it was found that there was a bad cut over one eye and the other was bleeding. Her wounds were dressed and she was taken to her home. The horse was captured without further damage.

Memorial Day, in the forenoon, the members of Essex Club were presented with a very handsome and lifelike artistic crayon picture of the late J. E. Clement who was at the time of his death a member of that club. The picture was the gift of Messrs. Miles & Carter of Lynn, personal friends of the deceased, and was from the studio of A. B. Cross of Salem. It is enclosed in a heavy antique bronze frame and will make a fine addition to the rooms. The presentation was made by Mr. J. T. Ronayne of Lynn, and was responded to by the President of the club, Wm. Blaney, who accepted the picture and returned the sincere thanks of the club, to the donors. After the presentation, the club and guests sat down to one of Baldwin's best dinners.

Work was begun yesterday morning by Supt. Bessie and his men to raise the sidewalk from the tree in front of Whidden's store to the entrance of Allen's new block, so as to compare with the grade of the street. The sidewalk will be raised twelve inches in front of Collins' cigar store, and run down to the level of the brick sidewalk in front of Spaulding's drug store. The new walk will do away with one step to several of the stores and offices in the block. The bricks will all be relaid. The horse railroad companies will bear part of the expense, as their raising the grade of their track made it necessary.

The funeral services of the late Rev. George N. Anthony, were held at Andover, last Wednesday, in the chapel of the Theological Seminary. The scriptures were read by Prof. John P. Taylor, the prayer was by Professor Park, and a brief address by Rev. Joseph Coit, secretary of the Mass. Home Missionary Society. The singing in the church and at the grave, was by a quartette from Bradford. The bearers were Rev. Dr. Woodworth, of the A. M. A., Rev. Dr. Strong, of the Missionary Herald, Dea. W. L. Greene, of the Congregationalist, and Dea. Andrew Cushing of the City Missionary Society. Interment in the chapel cemetery.

In the Superior Court last week Michael Carney was convicted of keeping liquor with intent to sell, and also of keeping a liquor nuisance. The cases have gone to the Supreme Court on exceptions. James Corbett was also convicted on one case, and the case carried to the Supreme Court. In the case of Elizabeth McCarthy, on charge of keeping liquor, the jury disagreed, standing nine for conviction and three for acquittal. Humphrey Moynahan plead guilty to two counts, keeping liquor and a nuisance, and the cases were carried up to the Supreme Court.

Sunday night the furniture store of Charles A. Goulding on Walnut street was entered, probably by boys, through a window in the cellar and about five dollars in coppers and five cent pieces taken from the safe, which was left unlocked. Mr. Goulding had been in the store in the evening and had forgotten to lock the safe. The thieves evidently did not wish for anything larger than five cent pieces, or else they overlooked a bag containing about twenty dollars in silver. The books in the safe were tumbled out on the floor. It is not known whether anything else was stolen or not. The case was put into the hands of the police.

Our readers will be pleased to learn that Henry J. Tressilian, whom it will be remembered strained the ligaments of his ankle, while stepping from a horse car about nine months ago, and has since been disabled from its effects, has recovered and is now at his post of duty again, at the store of P. W. Duffy, where he will be pleased to meet his former friends and customers. Mr. Duffy has a large stock of latest designs of oil stoves, and a good assortment of refrigerators. Call and see them.

Dr. Al Watts of Boston performed a surgical operation on the "caudal appendage" of a tigress in Van Amburg's circus, in Salem last Thursday. The beast, in a fit of frenzy about three weeks before had bitten off most of the tail, and the stump had not healed up, causing considerable pain. After the afternoon exhibition the tigress was lashed to the floor and the doctor entered the cage and removed seven pieces of bone and dressed the wound, to the great relief of the animal.

In the police court Tuesday morning Michael McCarthy for an assault on Edward F. Maroney was let off on the payment of the costs, $4.23. Garrett Walsh for an assault on Peter Fitzgerald was fined $3 and costs, which he paid like a little man. John Carney, for keeping liquor with intent to sell, was fined $100 and costs, and for keeping a liquor nuisance was fined $50 and costs and four months in the house of correction. He appealed on both cases, and was held in $300 on each.

P. P. Higgins new drama, "Paddy McGras' Secret" will be presented in the Town Hall, Wednesday evening, June 10th. Horrigan in the title role, will present it, and Norris & Semons, of Salem, who play on 25 different musical instruments will entertain the audience between the acts. The Cadet Orchestra also will be present. Secure your seats at Spaulding's.

There was a disgraceful row and drunken fracas on Aborn street, Salem, on Saturday evening. A man named Regan was knocked insensible by a blow from the fist of a fellow named Harrigan. Four men picked up the unconscious form of Regan and ran with him over the Peabody line, escaping barely in time to avoid the police. Regan came to, it is said, by the appliance of cold water, but was considerably bruised and somewhat dazed.

"Don't sit so near the window, darling," said a spoony young bridegroom to his bride on their wedding tour; "let us try to keep the car all to ourselves. Some crank is sure to get in if he sees your pretty face." The same speaker, thirty years later: "Move up to the window, old woman, so that we may have the car to ourselves; you will frighten all the other passengers away, you know."

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter, which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils or throat, and frequently by both channels.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individual at different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing, and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of a notable size, on which traces of blood may at times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant sniffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertions. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical or mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, loss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lighthill to decide on the first examination as to the curability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of and affections of the Nervous system from whatever cause.

"Courting-Sticks."

In early New England days, as far back as the middle of the eighteenth century, when hospitality was a practice as well as a virtue, there was in most houses only one large assembly room, and there the family and all the guests and chance callers gathered on winter nights about the blazing fire of logs. We know that youth was youth and love was love, and young men were timid and maidens were shy, and courtship went on in those days. How was courtship possible in this common room, where every word was heard and every look taken notice of? We read in the admirable volume on the recent centennial of Long Meadow, Mass., by Prof. Richard S. Starrs, of that town, in the winter evenings for the convenience of young lovers, since there was no "next-room," courting-sticks were used; that is, long wooden tubes that could convey from ear to ear sweet and secret whispers. Was this an invention peculiar to Long Meadow?

It is a charming picture that this calls up of life in a Puritan household, this tubular love-making, the pretty girl (nearly every girl is pretty in the firelight of long ago) seated in one stiff high-backed chair, and the staid but blushing lover in another, handling the courting-stick, itself an open confession of complacence, if not of true love. Would the young man dare to say, "I love you," through a tube, and would he feel encouraged by the laughing, tender eyes of the girl when she replied through the same passage, "Do tell!" Did they have two sticks, so that one end of one could be at the ear and the end of the other at the mouth all the while? How convenient, when the young man got more ardent than was seemly, as the flip went round, for the girl to put her thumb over the end of the tube; and stop the flow of soul! Did the young man bring his stick, and so announce his intention, or did the young lady always keep one or a pair on hand, and so reveal both willingness and expectation? It was much more convenient than the telephone, with its "hello" and proclamation to all listeners at each end of the line. Lovers can make love with anything, even with a telephone, the successful courting of a deaf person (for there is one word that nearly every one likes to hear), as we know, can go on through a speaking-trumpet; but these courting-sticks seem to us the ne plus ultra of tender communication—when a third party is present. They would be very useful now at large parties, where there is such a din and babble that one can only court a pretty girl at the risk of bronchitis or laryngitis. Sometimes in the jam you cannot get near the girl; but with a long courting-stick you could wile her away from her too ardent admirer. This invention seems to us worthy of revival for many reasons, and we should be glad of any further information in regard to it. Civilization in its progress drops a good many things that ought to be retained.

The Dude and the Oysters.

Right alongside the Cremorne Mission is a new Cremorne Garden, a typical music-hall, with no features novel enough to justify description. Here the slummers learned two more lessons. The first was that, seated at a table in a quiet corner, sipping their beverages while scrutinizing the scene of dissipation. They were not, in aspect, sufficiently different from that of frequent visitors to attract special attention. The girls had dreaded the commotion which their respectability would create, and were vastly chagrined when it did not do any such thing. They were almost unnoticed. The second piece of instruction related to the folly of British imitation. Their seats were near the oyster-stand, at which a youthful dandy stood to take a midnight luncheon.

"'Pon me woard," he remarked, after emptying the final shell, "I cawn't get oysters anywhere else in town that taste as they do in London, ye know."

As London oysters are noted for their brackish, unpalatable quality, one of the slummers inquired, on the Anglomaniac's departure, for an explanation.

"O, I got onto that dude the first time he came in," replied the man behind the counter, "he said the oysters I opened for him wasn't no good, and wanted ter know why we didn't open such ones as they did in London. Says I, 'I kin git yer some of ther London kind, but they'll cost yer double.' He said 'Bawther the expense,' an' I promised ter have 'em next time he dropped in. Well, when he showed up I jest opened a dozen of stale ones—reg'ler rankers, that was left over from ther day before. They hit hard. Now he comes in every night fer more of 'em. I sometimes guess they go ag'in his stomach, but he ain't going to let a little thing like that interfere with his English racket."—New York Letter.

HIS LOSS WAS HER GAIN.—"Well madam," said a fashionable physician to a wealthy lady patient, "if you don't like my prescriptions, perhaps you had better try Parker's Tonic, or some other quack stuff." "You don't mean it Doctor," she answered, "but your advice may be good for all that. Sometimes what you call 'quack stuff' is the best and most scientific medicine, after all." She got a bottle of Parker's Tonic and it cured her of neuralgia arising from disordered stomach and nerves. She told her friends, and now they all keep a doctor at home in the form of Parker's Tonic.

William M. Auld, for several years conductor of the Portland day express train on the Eastern railroad, died at North Berwick, Me., on Sunday, of heart disease, complicated with dropsy. He was 45 years of age, and had been employed upon the Eastern railroad for 18 years.

A New Orleans paper refers editorially to the wonderful restoration to health of Mr. T. Posey, druggist, 225 Canal street, that city, who some time ago was prostrated by an excruciating attack of sciatica. After much suffering his wife applied St. Jacobs Oil, which cured him promptly and entirely.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sensitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

EXZEMA OR SALT RHEUM.

ANOTHER CLEAR AND POSITIVE RECOVERY—

AN ELDERLY LADY'S LETTER.

Among the numerous letters received by Dr. Kennedy testifying to notable Salt Rheum cures, the following will be found of interest to our readers, who may accept our assurance of its perfect authenticity and truthfulness:

WORCESTER, Mass., March 23, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Until recently I have been for three years a sufferer from Salt Rheum. It followed upon an attack of Erysipelas, for which I was for a long time under medical treatment. I placed myself again in the hands of the physicians who did. I have no doubt, all that could be done. One thing is sure, however, I was none the better for all the medicine they gave me. The painful and unsightly disease made continual progress, until I began to fear I should never get rid of it.

By means of one of those accidents that often result in so much blessing I had my attention called to your FAVORITE REMEDY, which I was told would surely do me good. I used it, and within a much shorter time than I would have believed possible I received a permanent cure. I am now perfectly free from Salt Rheum. What a comfort this is, and how it places your wonderful medicine in my opinion, you may guess at, but never know. I keep it now constantly in the house as a family medicine. Yours truly, MRS. DINAH PHAIR.

Mrs. Phair sometime since, when on a visit to Kansas, found a case of Salt Rheum, could not get FAVORITE REMEDY, sent to New York City for it, and cured the case.

For all diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, Bladder and Digestive Organs, Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, Rondout, N. Y.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

FAVORITE REMEDY

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5. by all druggists.

Book Notices.

Nothing could be more acceptable to its large and cultivated audience than the leading contribution to the Magazine of American History for June. It is a critical study of the professional life and character of Charles O'Conor, by Chief-Justice Charles P. Daly, of New York. Members of the bar, in particular, will find this carefully prepared article intensely interesting. The career of Judge Asa Packer, the founder of Lehigh University, is pleasantly traced by Mr. Davis Brodhead. The curious "Antiquities of the Western States" forms the subject of an informing article by J. M. Bulkley, L. L. D. "The Cave Myth of the American Indians" is ably discussed by George S. Jones. "Elizabeth, England's Sovereign from 1558 to 1603," by the Editor, "The Discovery of Lake Superior" by Arthur Harvey, of Toronto. The Hon. P. V. Daniel, Jr., of Richmond, Va., criticises certain points in Mr. Robert C. Winthrop's oration on the completion of the Washington Monument, under the head of "Historical Errors Corrected;" and a short readable account of the "Oldest Orchard in Oneida County," by Rev. E. P. Powell, completes the main portion of the June number. The departments of Original Documents, Reprints, Notes, Queries, Replies, Societies and Book Notices, are admirably well filled. Sold by newsdealers everywhere. 50 cents a number, or $5.00 a year in advance. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

The following is the composition of an able youngster on the "Good Samaritan." The author says: "A certing man went down from jerslam to jeriker, and he fell among thieves and the thorns sprang up and choaked him, whereupon he gave tuppins to the host, and praid take care on him and put him hon his hone hass. And he past by on the other side."—Chambers' Journal.

"So you were out riding last night," said one bright girl to another.

"Yes," was the reply in a somewhat dissatisfied tone.

"Did you have a nice time?"

"Oh, yes, nice enough; but the horse was so wild that John had to use both hands all the time to hold him, and I just hate wild horses, because they are so dangerous, you know."

The other girl said she knew, but didn't say what she thought.—Merchant Traveler.

"I will admit my ignorance, so far as your question is concerned," said a young lady to a simpleton, who catechising her, for the purpose of drawing her out. "But I think I know what the height and breadth of impudence is."

"And what is it, my deah?"

After surveying his proportions for a moment, she said: "Well, sir, I should judge that the height of impudence is about five feet four, and the breadth of it is about the width of your cheek."—Burlington Hawkeye

The Blaney building, in the rear of Phœnix block on Lafayette street, Salem, has a chimney composed of earthern drain pipe, built in 1882, and the local board of insurance underwriters has notified the owner, Stephen Blaney of Peabody that from July 1 all insurance policies on the building will be cancelled unless the chimney is removed and a brick chimney built up from the ground. At first the proprietor proposed to carry his own risk, but the tenants, who also have policies on their own stock, object. The underwriters have also decided to cancel all policies on buildings where there are drain pipe connections with the chimneys, of which there are a number in South Salem. This matter was brought to the attention of the City Council by Inspector of Buildings Smith, when he refused to sign an application for a permit to erect such a chimney in a dwelling-house. The matter came before the Council and an attempt was made to show that such chimneys are safe.—Globe.

MOTHERS SHOULD NOTE THIS. Under this caption an old physician writes to a Cincinnati Medical Journal, that in view of the fact that people living at a distance from cities are frequently obliged to resort to cough mixtures already put up for use, they should provide themselves with only such remedies as are known to be free from opiates, poisons and narcotics; thus avoiding not only danger, but even fatal results. He recommends the recently discovered Red Star Cough Cure which analyses and tests by various Boards of Health proved to be purely vegetable as well as prompt, effective and entirely harmless.

Burglars operated to some extent in Salem, Thursday, the residences of Mrs. George B. Ferguson, Roslyn street, and W. H. Hurd, of Winthrop street, having been entered and robbed of articles of value.

The Dolphin made a successful trial trip on Thursday, and Mr. Roach is happy. She made the trip of about ninety miles at the rate of from 15 to 16 1-2 knots an hour.

THE DRAMA

There will be no change at the Park, Bijou, and Boston Theatres this week, and there is no good reason why the current attraction at each should not hold the stage for weeks to come.

At the Park, Messrs. Ball and Braham's charming Shakespearian "vagary," "Bottoms's Dream," leaped into popularity at a single bound, and has since delighted crowded houses. The second act, which was the weakest of the three, will be greatly changed for the better, by the introduction of new features and specialties, and, with this improvement, it is safe to predict a continuance of the prosperity it has thus far enjoyed.

Messrs. Nat. Childs and Willie Edouin's musical comedy of "Dreams, or Fun in a Photograph Gallery," has lost none of its attractiveness for playgoers since it was last seen here, and during the past week the Bijou has been well filled at its every representation. Mr. Jacques Kruger has renewed his former success in his original creation of the Photographer, and his company is in all respects able to give the piece an admirable performance. The coming week is the last of the engagement.

"Peck's Bad Boy," as presented by Atkinson's Comedy Company, has been enjoyed by large audiences at the Boston Theatre, and will hold the stage another week. This amusing production has already been played in Boston during five engagements, and that it continues to draw good houses is ample proof of its strength as an attraction.

At the Boston Museum, Little Corrinne begins an engagement with the first production in this city of her new musical piece, entitled "Capers."

At the Howard Athenæum, Lester and Allen's new minstrel company will appear for the first time in Boston. This organization includes besides the proprietors, who have long been popular favorites here, Sheffer and Blakely, George Powers, Sheppard and Hallen, Charles H. Hoey, Banks Winter, Will H. Morse, George W. Turner, the Hayden quartet.—Messrs. Frank M. Hayden, Frank Kinsley, N. B. Goffe and C. O. Wallace, H. J. Howard, Frank Davis and many others equally well known, together with a full band under the direction of Prof. Harry Grieves. A fine programme is promised, concluding with the sketch of southern life entitled "Way Down South," in which the whole company will appear, together with Little Dixie, the "Alabama pickaninny."

Mr. F. W. Gaskill, treasurer, and Mr. George P. Hartshorn, ticket agent, of the Bijou Theatre, are to have a benefit on Friday afternoon, June 12, on which occasion a fine entertainment will be presented. Particulars will be announced hereafter.

Mr. Napier Lothian, Jr., for a long time stage manager of the Boston Theatre, will have a benefit at that house on Wednesday afternoon, June 10, on which occasion "Kit" will be performed, with Mr. Henry Chanfrau in the title part, so long sustained by his late father.

Mr. George W. Floyd, business manager of Mr. Nat C. Goodwin's company, will be given a benefit at the Park Theatre on Monday evening, June 8, on which occasion the Goodwin company will play "Bottom's Dream," Mr. Louis Aldrich will give a recitation, Mr. Jacques Kruger will appear in one of his old time sketches, Mr. Sol Smith Russell will give his specialties, Mr. Frank Daniels will appear, and other well known artists will give their services.

STREET GOSSIP
AS GLEANED
NOTES
Mulcahy

There is an unscrupulous party who lives in this beautiful town who has evidently made up his mind that the world owes him a living, and that a certain gentleman on Central street was a pretty large part of the world. About three months ago the citizen lost a part of a harness, for which no one has yet accounted. A fortnight later three of his fattest hens were missing. Later some one went through his cellar and he was short a bushel of potatoes and a lot of onions. The citizen has, so far, taken the thing coolly, but informs me that if the fellow don't let up on him and give him a chance to recuperate and replenish his losses, he will be obliged to lay in wait for the intruder with a shot gun.

Our coupe driver has always been known for his distinguished kindness, but he recently had a set back which has learned him a lesson. He was driving along with that light cream colored horse of his attached to the coupe, when he found a party stuck on a new graveled road. He took his horse and attached it to the other team and started. The animal gave a jump and broke both traces. Henry quietly drove to a harness shop and left $3 for repairs. You couldn't induce him to help another man out of trouble for love nor money.

Report says that the new hotel will have instead of a bar-room a small chapel in which guests, if they choose, can hold religious meetings. I would give a quarter to be around when a certain drummer of my acquaintance gets into that chapel before breakfast in search of his regular morning bitters. He would make Rome howl.

Lawyers are just as liable to make ridiculous mistakes as anyone. I noticed this in the police court recently, when a female witness was paralyzed by a question from lawyer Crowley, asking "if she didn't have a hydrant in her house." He probably thought the neighbors near a hydrant took them in nights.

It is said that the census enumerator works on faith. That is, he don't get his pay till the State sees fit to give it to him after his work is done. Faith is a good thing sometimes, but for a regular diet something more hearty is preferred by the stomach.

I have my opinion of the girl who will allow a fellow to see her as far as the church door Sunday night and then leave, to be on hand again when church lets out. Yet I notice it nearly every Sunday night. Girls, give such a fellow the go-by; he is not worthy of you.

Mr. Hayes, manager of the Gardner farm in Peabody, drove a yoke of steers to pasture in Middleton this week, and took there and turned loose with them a woodchuck he had caught at home. A Danvers blacksmith who was let into the secret while the steers' shoes were being taken off, thinks Mr. Hayes must have had an awful spite against that woodchuck; although he claimed to be so tender hearted that he could not kill it. Another view of the matter is that, Mr. Hayes being a New Hampshire Democrat, he took the woodchuck up there to bother the good Republican citizens of Middleton,—just as though they had not sorrow enough already, with Cleveland in the White House, and Dr. Loring no longer Commissioner of Agriculture. We must set Mr. Hayes down as a cruel, heartless man.—Danvers Mirror.

LOOKING FOR A WAR MEDAL'S OWNER.—Quite recently, says the Haverhill Gazette, a Confederate soldier picked up a medal on the battlefield of Fredericksburg with the name of "Albert Rodgers, Company C, 19th Mass.," engraved upon it. The finder was desirous that the relatives of Rodgers should receive the medal, and Mr. Wm. Estes of Bradford, who was also a member of this regiment, is endeavoring to have the medal restored to the Rodgers family. He has ascertained that Rodgers has a sister living in Byfield.

Said Rodgers enlisted in the 19th Regiment from Newbury, Mass., and at the battle of Fredericksburg was in the color company, then commanded by Capt. John C. Chadwick of Salem.—Salem Observer.

It is a shame for the great, rich city of New York to be begging around the country for funds to set up the statue of "Liberty" in their harbor. If it had been given to the town of Rowley or Newburyport or any small place there would be reason for asking for a undred thousand dollars for a pedestal. But as the chief metropolis of the estern Hemisphere, with its popu- on of nearly two millions and un- wealth in its coffers, it should h to ask the town of Boxford for help to set up its light house.—George- Advocate.

The Missing Link.

"Krao," the so-called "missing link" whose history and appearance have considerably exrocised scientists and amused the curious in Europe, arrived in Philadelphia yesterday morning in charge of George Shelley, who accompanied Carl Bock, the traveler, to Siam three years ago, when the child was captured. Mr. Shelley sat last night in an upper room at the Bingham House with "Krao" beside him, and discoursed learnedly and voluminously on his little charge. The child, who is believed to be between 8 and 9 years of age, was neatly dressed in a terra-cotta gown, red stockings and buttoned kid shoes. Heavy silver bracelets adorned her hairy arms and a cord, interwoven with gold thread, encircled her waist. Though the nose is flat, and the face and forehead are covered with black hair of varying length and closeness, the child is saved from repulsiveness by her remarkably large, dark, gentle, and intelligent eyes, and her general expression of sense and good nature.

"Krao," says Mr. Shelley, was captured with her parents in January, 1881, in the wilds of the Laso country, in Northern Siam. All of the tribe that have been seen are completely covered with hair. In their natural state they live in trees, are destitute of clothing, and almost without language. Their food is fruits, fish and nuts. They have few implements, and do not possess the knowledge of fire. The name "Krao" is simply the Siamese for ape.

Mr. Shelley, who is a believer in the Darwinian theory, while not pretending that Krao and her tribe supply the only link between man and the higher apes, holds to the idea that these curious people are allied to the chimpanzee in many physical points, with much resemblance to civilized man in intellect. He instances as Krao's ape-like characteristics the following facts: She has thirteen dorsal vertebræ and thirteen pairs of ribs, instead of twelve, as in man. She has pouches in the mouth where she still stores nuts and sweetmeats. Her cranial measurements correspond with those of the higher apes. Her ears and nose are without cartilage. Her fingers are abnormally flexible. The hair on her body grows in directions that characterize the Siamese hirsute growth.

Krao, since her captivity, has learned to read, write and speak English, and has also acquired some knowledge of German. From a wild, untaught little savage, she has developed into a docile, affectionate, and remarkably intelligent child. She still has recollections of her wild life in Siam. The child last evening wrote her name in full, Krao Farini, with a pencil, in a large, round, copy-book hand, picked up a handkerchief with her toes, and good-naturedly opened her mouth to show where she had stored away nuts in her curious, ape-like pouches.—Philadelphia Press

How to Split a Sheet of Paper.

It is one of the most remarkable properties of that wonderful product, paper, that it can be split into two or even three parts, however thin the sheet. We have seen a sheet of the Illustrated News thus divided into three parts, or three thin leaves. One consisted of the surface on which the engravings are printed; another was the side containing the letter-press, and a perfectly blank piece on each side was the paper that lay between. Many people who have not seen this done might think it impossible; yet it is not only possible but extremely easy, as we shall show. Get a piece of plate-glass, and place on it a sheet of paper; then let the latter be thoroughly soaked. With care and a little dexterity the sheet can be split by the top surface being removed. But the best plan is to paste a piece of cloth or strong paper to each side of the sheet to be split. When dry, violently and without hesitation pull the two pieces asunder, when part of the sheet will be found to have adhered to one and part to the other. Soften the paste in water and the pieces can be easily removed from the cloth. The process is generally demonstrated as a matter of curiosity, yet it can be utalized in various ways. If we want to paste in a scrap-book a newspaper article printed on both sides of the paper, and possess only one copy, it is very convenient to know how to detach the one side from the other. The paper when split, as may be imagined, is more transparent than when it was before being subjected to the operation, and the printing-ink is somewhat duller; otherwise the two pieces present the appearance of the original if again brought together. Some time ago the information of how to do this splitting was advertised to be sold for a considerable sum. We now impart it to all our readers gratuitously—British and Colonial Printer and Stationer.

If we do not have an early frost, and the weather is not too wet or too dry, and the insects are not too ravenous, and the blight don't strike, and nothing else of a discouraging nature transpires we will probably have a good fruit crop.

The Lawrence American says:—On Thursday evening of last week some rascals broke down several fine shade trees belonging to Gen. Eben Sutton and Mr. John H. Sutton, and stoned Capt. Wm. J. Chever's residence, one of the missiles crashing through a window and entering the latter's chamber. District Officer Batchelder is at work on the case.

Poet's Corner.

An Ancient Riddle.

A great many years ago a prominent merchant in Taunton, Mass., promised to an eccentric old woman, named Lucy King, that if, taking her subject from the bible, she would compose a riddle which he could not guess, he would give her a certain prize. The riddle was as follows:—

Adam, God made out of dust,
But thought it best to make me first;
So I was made before the man,
To answer His most holy plan.

My body, He did make complete,
But without arms, or legs, or feet;
My ways and acts He did control,
But to my body gave no soul.

A living being I became,
And Adam gave to me a name;
I from his presence then withdrew,
And more of Adam never knew.

I did my Maker's law obey,
Nor from it ever went astray;
Thousands of miles I go in fear,
But seldom on the earth appear.

For purpose wise which God did see,
He put a living soul in me;
A soul from me my God did claim,
And took from me the soul again.

For when from me that soul had fled,
I was the same as when first made;
And without hands or feet or soul
I travel on from pole to pole.

I labor hard by day and night,
To fallen man I give great light;
Thousands of people, young and old,
Do by my death great light behold.

No right or wrong can I conceive,
The scriptures I cannot believe;
Although my name therein is found,
They are to me but empty sound.

No fear of death doth trouble me,
Real happiness I ne'er shall see;
To heaven I shall never go,
Nor to the grave, nor hell below.

Now, when these lines you closely read,
Go search your bible, with all speed;
For that my name's recorded there
I honestly to you declare.

The Two Villages.

Over the river on the hill
Lieth a village quiet and still;
All around it the forest trees
Shiver and whisper in the breeze.
Over it, sailing shadows go
Of soaring hawk and screaming crow,
And mountain grasses low and sweet,
Grow in the middle of every street.

Over the river under the hill
Another village lieth still;
There I see in the cloudy night
Twinkling stars of household light,
Fires that gleam from the smith's door,
Mists that curl on the river shore,
And in the road no grasses grow
For the wheels that hasten to and fro.

In that village on the hill
Never a sound of smith or mill;
The houses are thatched with grasses and flowers,
Never a clock to toll the hours;
The marble doors are always shut,
You cannot enter in hall or hut,
All the village lieth asleep.
Never a grain to sow or reap,
Never in dreams to moan or sigh,
Silent and idle and low they lie.

In that village under the hill,
When the night is starry and still
Many a weary soul in prayer
Looks to the other village there,
And weeping and sighing longs to go
Up to that home from this below,
Longs to sleep in the forest wild
Whither have vanished wife and child,
And heareth praying, this answer fall,—
"Patience! This village shall hold you all!"

Boots.

Two lovers hung on a garden gate,
The moon was hidden and the hour late;
Stern parent watching the tender embrace,
Landed his boot in a tenderer place.

One lover was left at the garden gate,
The other had gone at a 2.40 rate,
While the stern parent's foot kept swinging in space,
Impelled by the blow on that tender place

The tender place where the boot did land
We will not mention, you understand;
But such stern treatment he did declare,
Kept him two weeks in a cushioned chair.

The Downfall.

Last night at the rink,
I made my confession,
She had liked me, I think,
Till last night at the rink;
I felt her form sink—
I let go with discretion,
Last night at the rink
We made an impression.

Selected Story.

Fourth Cousins.

BY GORDON STABLES.

In the early Summer of 1860 I went upon a visit to a distant relative of mine who lived in one of the Shetland Islands. It was early Summer with myself then; I was a medical student with life all before me—life and hope, and joy and sorrow as well. I went north with the intention of working hard, and took quite a small library with me; there was nothing in the shape of study I did not mean to do, and to drive at; the flora of the Ultima Thule, its fauna and geology, too, to say nothing of chemistry and therapeutics. So much for good intentions, but—I may as well confess it as not—I never once opened my huge box of books during the five months I lived at R———, and if I studied at all it was from the book of Nature, which is open to every one who cares to con its pages.

The steamboat landed me at Lerwick, and I completed my journey—with my boxes—next day in an open boat.

It was a very cold morning, with a gray, cold, choppy sea on, the spray from which dashed over the boat, wetting me thoroughly, and making me feel pinched, blear-eyed, and miserable. I even envied the seals I saw cosily asleep in dry, sandy caves, at the foot of the black and beetling rocks.

How very fantastic those rocks were, but cheerless, so cheerless! Even the sea-birds that circled around them seemed screaming a dirge. An opening in a wall of rock took us at length into a long, winding fiord, or arm of the sea, with green bare fields on every side, and wild weird-like sheep that gazed on us for a moment, then bleated and fled. Right at the end of this rock stood my friend's house, comfortable and solid-looking, but unsheltered by a single tree.

'I shan't stay long here,' I said to myself, as I landed.

An hour or two afterward I had changed my mind entirely. I was seated in a charmingly and cosily furnished drawing-room up stairs. The windows looked out to and away across the broad Atlantic. How strange it was; for the loch that had led me to the front of the house, and the waters of which rippled up and down the very lawn, was part of the German Ocean, and here at the back, and not a stone's-throw distant, was the Atlantic. Its great, green, dark billows rolled up and broke into foam against the black breastwork of cliffs beneath us. The immense depth of its waves could be judged of by keeping the eye fixed upon the tall, steeple-like rocks which shot up here and there through the water a little way out to sea—at one moment these would appear like lofty spires, and next they would be almost entirely swallowed up.

Beside the fire, in an easy chair, sat my gray-haired old relation and host, and not far off his wife. Hospitable, warm-hearted and genial both of them were. If marriages really are made in heaven, I could not help thinking theirs must have been, so much did they seem each other's counterpart.

Presently Cousin Maggie entered, smiling to me as she did so; her left hand lingered fondly for a moment on her father's gray locks then she sat down unbidden to the piano.

On the strength of my blood-relationship, distant though it was, for we were really only third or fourth cousins, I was made a member of this family from the first, and Maggie treated me as a brother. I was not entirely pleased with the latter arrangement, because many days had not passed ere I conluded it would be a pleasant pastime for me to make love to Cousin Maggie. But weeks went by, and my love-making was still postponed; it became a sine die kind of a probability. Maggie was constantly with me when out of doors—my companion in all my fishing and shooting trips. But she carried not only a rod but even a rifle herself; she could give me lessons in casting the fly—and did; she often shot dead the seals that I had merely wounded, and her prowess in rowing astonished me, and her daring in venturing so far to sea in our broad, open boat, often made me tremble for our safety.

A frequent visitor for the first two months of my stay at R———was a young and well-to-do farmer and fisher, who came in his boat from a neighboring island, always accompanied by his sister, and they usually stayed a day or two. I was not long in perceiving that this Mr. Thorforth was deeply in love with my cousin; the state of her feeling toward him it was some time before I could fathom, but the revelation came at last and quite unexpectedly.

There was an old ruin some distance from the house, where, one lovely moonlight night, I happened to be seated alone. I was not alone, however; from a window I could see my cousin and Thorforth coming toward the place, and, thinking to surprise them, I drew back under the shadow of a portion of the wall. But I was not to be an actor in that scene, though it was one I shall never forget. I could not see his face, but hers, on which the moonbeams fell, was pained, half-frightened, impatient. He was pleading his cause, he was telling the old, old story, with an earnestness and eloquence I had never heard surpassed. She stopped it at last.

'Oh! Magnus,' she cried. 'Oh! Magnus Thorforth, I never dreamed it would come to this! Oh! what grief you cause me, my poor Magnus, my more than friend!'

What more was said need not be told. In a few moments he was gone, and she was kneeling on the green sward, just on the spot where he had left her, her hands clasped, and her face upturned to heaven.

Next day Magnus Thorforth went sadly away; even his sister looked sad. She must have known it all. I never saw them again.

One day, about a month after this, Maggie and I were together in a cave, close by the ocean—a favorite haunt of ours on hot forenoons. Our boat was drawn up close by. The day was bright and the sea calm, its tiny wavelets making drowsy, dreamy music on the yellow sands.

She had been reading aloud, and I was gazing at her face.

'I begin to think you are beautiful,' I said.

She looked at me where I lay with those innocent eyes of hers that always looked into mine as frankly as a child's would.

'I am not sure,' I continued, 'that I shan't commence making love to you, and perhaps I might marry you. What would you think of that?'

'Love!' she laughed, as musically as a sea nymph, 'love? Love betwixt a cousin and a cousin? Preposterous!'

'I dare say,' I resumed, pretending to pout, 'you wouldn't marry me because I'm poor.'

'Poor!' she repeated, looking very firm and earnest now, 'if the man I loved were poor, I'd carry a creel for him. I'd gather shells for his sake; but I don't love anybody and don't mean to. Come!'

So that was the beginning and the end of my love-making with Cousin Maggie.

And Maggie had said she never meant to love any one. Well, we never can tell what may be in our immediate future.

Hardly had we left the cave that day, and put off from the shore, ere cats-paws began to ruffle the water. They came in from the west, and before we had got half-way to the distant headland, a steady breeze was blowing. We had hoisted our sail, and were running before it with the speed of a gull on the wing.

Once round the point, we had a beam wind till we entered the fiord, then we had to beat to windard all the way home, by which time it was blowing quite a gale.

It went round more to the north about sunset, and then, for the first time, we noticed a yacht of small dimensions on the distant horizon. Her intention appeared to be that of rounding the island and probably anchoring on the lee side of it. She was in an ugly position, however, and we all watched her anxiously till nightfall hid her from our view.

I retired early, but sleep was out of the question, for the wind raged and howled around the house like wild wolves. About 12 o'clock the sound of a gun fell on my ears. I could not be mistaken, for the window rattled in sharp response.

I sprang from my couch and began to dress, and immediately after, my aged relative entered the room. He looked younger and taller than I had seen him, but very serious.

'The yacht is on the Ba,' he said solemnly.

They were words to me of fearful significance. The yacht, I knew must soon break up, and nothing could save the crew.

I quickly followed my relative into the back drawing-room, where Maggie was with her mother. We gazed out into the night, out and across the sea.

At the same moment, out there on he terrible Ba, a blue light sprang up, revealing the yacht and even its people on board. She was leaning well over to one side, her masts tgone, and the spray dashing over her.'

'Come, cried Maggie, 'there is no time to lose. We can guide their boat to the cave. Come cousin!'

I felt dazed, thunderstruck. Was I to take an active part in a forlorn hope? Was Maggie—how beautiful and daring she looked now—to assume the role of a modern Grace Darling? So it appeared.

The events of that night come back to my memory now as if they happened but yesterday. It is a page in my past life that can never be ofbliberated.

We pulled out of the fiord, Maggie and I, and up under the lee o the island, then, on rounding the point, we encountered the whole force of the sea and wind. There was a glimmering light on the wrecked yacht, and for that we rowed, or rather were borne along on the gale. No boat save a Shetland skiff could have been trusted in such a sea.

As we neared the Ba, steadying herself by leaning on my shoulder, Maggie stood half up and waved the lantern, and it was answered from the wreck. Next moment ite semed to me we were on the lee side and Maggie herself hailed the shipwrecked people.

'We cannot come nearer,' she cried; 'lower your boat and follow our light closely.'

'Take the tiller, now,' she continued, addressing me, 'and steer for the light you see on the cliff. Keep her well up, though, or all will be lost.'

We waited—and that with difficulty—for a few minutes, till we saw by the starlight that the yacht's boat was lowered, then away we went.

The light on the cliff-top moved slowly down the wind. I kept the boat's head a point or two above it, and on she dashed. The rocks loomed black and high as we neared them, the waves breaking in terrible turmoil beneath.

Suddenly the light was lowered over the cliff down to the very water's edge.

'Steady now,' cried my brave cousin, and the next moment we were round a point and into smooth water, with the yacht's boat close beside us. The place was partly cave, partly 'noss.' We beached our boats, and here we remained all night, and were all rescued next morning by a fisherman's yawl.

The yacht's people were the captain, his wife, and one boy—Norwegians all, Brinster by name.

My story is nearly done. What need to tell of the gratitude of those whom Maggie's heroism had saved from a watery grave.

But it came to pass that when a few months afterwards, a beautiful new yacht came round to the fiord to take those shipwrecked mariners away, Cousin Maggie went with them on a cruise.

It came to pass that when I paid my very next visit to R———, in the following summer. I found living at my relative's house a Major Brinster and a Mrs Brinster.

And Mrs. Brinster was my cousin Maggie, and Major Brinster was my cousin Maggie's 'fate.'

During the war, a lady passing from cot to cot through the wards of a hospital, was shocked to hear one fellow laugh at her. She stopped to reprove the wretched patient.

"Why, ma'am," says he, "you have given me a tract on the sin of dancing, when I have both legs shot off."

As if by magic one's pains vanish if he be a sufferer from rheumatism or neuralgia and applies St. Jacobs Oil, the pain banisher.

A Cow-Boy in a Sleeping Car—'Where do I camp?' he inquired, and was shown the lower berth next to me.

'That's my pigeon-hole is it? All righ old son, just watch my motion while I file myself away.'

At this juncture he was desired to turn over his revolver to the porter, which he declined to do in a very spirited manner.

''Old Dad'(his revolver) and me always sleep together, and we don't want no divorce,' he explained.

The conductor remonstrated, but was advised not to try to 'braid this mule's tail.'

'This here's a sleepin' car, ain't it?' he at length inquired.

'Yes.'

'Well, why in——don't you let people sleep then when they've paid and gone into your game? If you're aiming to keep people awake and want company, just dance into the next car; they don't want to go to sleep, no how, and they'll be glad to see you.

The conductor withdrew and my friend pulled off his boots and stretched himself with many comments in an undertone on the poverty of the surroundings.

In about ten minutes this erratic person had his head out in the aisle.

'Say, you boy!' to the porter.

'Well, sah.'

'Come a runnin'.'

The porter drew near and was handed a pillow about as big as a pin-cushion.

'Don't you want a pillow sah?' asked the porter.

'That ain't no pillow and I don't want it no how; I am afraid it'll get in my ear.'

After this, silence, and for a short time I slept. I roused up, however, at an exclamation on the part of my neighbor.

'Hold on there, my son, jist drap them boots.'

'I was only jest gwine to black 'em, boss.'

'Drap 'em.'

They drapped.

'Jest gwine to pull them spurs, I reckon. Now, don't monkey around my camp, taking things no more. If you want anything speak for it. If you can't speak make signs, and if you can't make signs shake a bush. You h'ar me?'

'Yes, sah.'

After this, silence. The wheels and rails again sang together and the car again kept approving time and presently I slept without interruption.

The Wild Experience of a Detroiter with the New Fire Extinguisher.—It was over a year ago that Bliss, of Ninth avenue, carried home seven or eight of the hand grenades used to throw at a blaze and knock an incipient conflagration into a continental cocked hat. He had never met with any loss by fire, but he felt it in his bones that the hour was coming and he meant to be prepared for it. He put the bottles up in a rack in the hall, and he never went past them without wishing for an opportunity to test their merits. He didn't want to be routed out at midnight and find the roof ablaze, but if he could be on hand when the kitchen stove pipe warmed up the ceiling overhead or a lamp exploded up stairs, or the ash barrel got up a bonfire on its own account, he'd show his nerve and laugh at the fire department.

The other night he gave a party and the long-wished-for opportunity came. Some one swung a gas jet against a curtain, and there were shouts and screams and great confusion. Bliss was as cool as ice. He fell over a chair, upset a young woman, and rushed into the kitchen and got a tea cup of water and doused it on the flames. This didn't do any good, and he kicked over a euchre stand and pounded at the flames with a mug. Then he rushed after more water, and this time it was the contents of the dipper which he emptied over the champion progressive eucherist instead of the blazing curtains. It was not until the smoking remnants had been dragged down and flung out doors that Bliss thought of his grenades, and it wasn't two minutes after he had got hold of one before he had knocked down two men, smashed the parlor mirror, and cleared the house of the crowd. Some one turned in an alarm and the engines came out, but Bliss waived a seven dollar tidy out of a broken window in his grimy hand and shouted:

'No use—put up your old machines! First grenade did the whole business without turning a hair.—Detroit Free Press.

BOUGHTON'S HARD WOOD WINDOW SCREENS.

Read the Story

The maker of the Boughton Window Screen is the great PHILADELPHIA MANUFACTURE of "PARQUET Floors." An idea of the magnitude of his business may be gained from the statement that he cuts and saws his hard wood timber in Virginia, from his own forests, and ships the lumber to his great factory in Philadelphia. The screens are made from the waste of wood floors, and costing nothing but for labor and wire, can be sold cheaper than a common soft wood screen. This Screen through a combination of circumstances, lost its foot-hold in New England last season. Knowing the merits of the screen we decided to bring it back, and accepted the agency for New England. After June 1st, when the jobbing season is virtually over, by sending out our men here and there we disposed of nearly 10,000 screens in a short time. Through our influence the screen is represented this season in every New England town, though we do not job them now. We have decided to make a very low price for a short time on Boughton's Hard Wood Window Screens, namely:

For Medium Sizes, 33 cents.
For Extra Sizes, 37 1-2 cents.

We cannot promise to maintain these prices for the season as the manufacturer and Boston agents are our friends, and they are afraid it will have an effect all over New England. We will however, sell 10 gross or 1440 screens at above prices.

POETRY OR BILIOUSNESS. — "O, sir," said the faded poetess, addressing the editor, "if I do not write, the rocks will cry out!"

"That so?"

"Yes, if I do not write, the rocks will cry out."

"Now, I'll tell you. If I were you, I would let 'em cry a little. Won't hurt 'em, a few tears won't. Might do 'em good."

"You are as cold as a stone," she said.

"Yes, that's a fact, but I shall not cry out should you fail to write. Miss. Presuming in me to call you miss?"

"I am unmarried, sir."

"Divorced. I see."

"I was never married, sir."

"Then how could you be unmarried? Well, it makes no difference. I desire to tell you something. I was once light-hearted, gushing and joyous. Why did I fall from that joyous estate? I wrote poetry. I felt a surging within me. I knew it was a muse. The doctor said I was bilious, but I knew better. I wrote a poem, and neglected the bile. Now you see me the wretch that I am. O had I served my bile as I had my muse!"

"You are a fool!" said the faded woman, rising.

"Yes, I am a fool. Should have known better. I will never do it again."

"Do what?"

"Fail to lock the door when I hear gentle footsteps, soft and low."

Her skirts popped as she flitted through the door.

THE GOOD BOOK.—Contrary to orders, Bobby had taken the family Bible from the parlor table, where it was very carefully kept, and by the time he got through with it the signs of wear and tear were painfully apparent. For this act of disobedience he received a severe whipping, and was sent supperless to bed.

"It is a source of great gratification to me," said the minister, who was making a call that same evening, as he lifted the book from the table and discovered its condition, "to find that in this household, at least, the Bible is not neglected. It is too often the case, I regret to say, that the contents of the Good Book remain unsought. But I am pleased, Mr. Smith, to know," he continued, "that you find daily consolation in its pages."

Mr. Smith devoutly acknowledged the pleasure and profit he derived from its frequent study, and after the minister left he took up to Bobby a glass of milk and a large slice of bread and butter with jam on it.

WHO GET THE PLUMS? Labor supports 50,000 state office holders, 125,000 federal office holders, a standing army of 25,000, a navy of 20,000, besides 100,000 ministers, 125,000 lawyers, 150,000 doctors, and innumerable other quacks. The farmer gives these idlers his best veal, beef, wheat and mutton, be has left the heads, plucks and middlings. The coal miner gives them the best coal while he burns screenings; the gold digger gives them the best metal, while he wears brass; the weaver gives them the silks and laces, while she wears the five-cent print; the tailor gives them the best broadcloth, while he wears shoddy. Thus it is with everything. The drones live on the fat of the land.—Lansing (Mich) Sentinel.

FORGOT SOMETHING.—"What! You in mourning!" she exclaimed, as she entered the car and caught sight of an acquaintance.

"Yes."

"Some one dead?"

"Yes."

"Dead and buried, eh?"

"Yes."

"Well, that's too bad! Died of pneumonia, I suppose?"

"No—of brain fever."

"Dear me, but that's awful! How do you like my new hat?"

The new-comer rattled on in this fashion for twenty minutes, and then left the car. As it started again after leaving her on the cross-walk she made vigorous motions to the conductor, and when he had brought the vehicle to a halt she said:

"Won't you please ask that lady friend of mine if it was her husband or one of the children who died. I forgot to find out!"

She didn't find out on that trip.

SICK HEADACHE.—Thousands who have suffered intensely with sick headache say that Hood's Sarsaparilla has completely cured them. One gentleman thus relieved, writes: "Hood's Sarsaparilla is worth its weight in gold." Reader, if you are a sufferer with sick headache, give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

A young nephew of J. L. Colcord has sent him several letters from Jacksonville, Florida, and below we are permitted to give extracts from them. Considering the boy's age they are quite interesting.

DEAR UNCLE: I will give you a description of Decoration Day services at Jacksonville. The whole town adjourned to the soldiers' graves to-day, and we have a new holiday to punctuate the local year. Considering the short time in which this Celebration has been worked up, it must be regarded as one of the most gratifying successes ever recorded in Jacksonville, and reflects infinite credit upon the patience, energy and devotion of the Grand Army men, and notably Rev. Dr. Paine and Chaplain Gale, who were in large degree, the inspiration of the work. But the truth is, that the Grand Army Men in their generous proposal to decorate Confederate graves, and in their graceful courtesy to Southern soldiers and citizens touched a responsive chord in the hearts of the people, and the grand out pouring of this morning, was in part a tribute to the courtesy and generous conduct of the Northern soldiers in our midst and the tribute was a royal one. Not since the last campaign has a larger procession paraded through our streets, it was not far from half a mile in length, and hundreds lined the streets to see it pass.

Another letter dated May 18, 1885, says:—We went to Monchrief Springs yesterday. On the way we saw potatoes six inches high and corn three feet high, and strawberries were ripe three weeks ago. There are young oranges three quarters of an inch in diameter or about an inch and one-half in circumference. We had green peas six weeks ago. It has been pleasant weather for two weeks. There is going to be a snapper fish excursion soon. The snappers are a fish about four feet long and 9 inches broad. They are in color a deep pink, almost red. I think I will go on the next one if mamma will let me, the only difficulty is you have to get up at three o'clock in the morning to get over the bar, and you have a fine chance of being seasick. RUSSELL.

FASHION NOTES ON LADIES' HAIR DRESSING.—The spring and summer fashions for ladies' hair dressing will not change materially from the styles which have prevailed the past winter. The hair continues to be worn high, the bowknot on the crown of the head with a few waves and short curls tapering toward the neck, being almost universal for ordinary wear. The front hair is worn very fluffy in Pompadour shape, a perfect nest of short waves and ring curls. Many ladies use a small Pompadour roll to heighten the front hair and pin their front coiffures. These styles are worn by young ladies also, but there are many ladies particularly those whose hair is turning gray, who do not think these curls are dignified, and who prefer to wear the hair parted in the centre and waved in large waves at the sides—Madonna style.

Many ladies are still wearing the straight bang; but this fashion is on the wane. Fashionable ladies' hairdressers' stores are filled with different styles of ornamental hair goods, all intended to save the ladies the trouble of arranging their own hair. Never was false hair so much worn as at present, although it does not appear so, as it is not fashionable to wear bulky chignons. But the front coiffures which often cover almost all the head, are so artistically made that no one supposes that they are merely conveniences, removable at will. A fashionable lady can thus appear as a blonde or a brunette, or with golden auburn locks, as it may please her fancy, and many do.

Shell pins, plain, are used altogether for arranging the loops of hair. Fancy shell pins, silver and Rhine stone ornaments in endless variety are worn in the back hair. For evening wear, puffs of feathers and flowers. For young ladies, knots of flowing ribbons.

THAT DIRTY DANDRUFF.—Dandruff is dirty and disagreeable in every way. It soils the clothing continually, and is accompanied by a hardly less annoying sensation of itching. The scalp is diseased. There is nothing in the world so thoroughly adapted to this trouble as Parker's Hair Balsam. It cleanses and heals the scalp, stops the falling hair and restores its original softness, gloss and color. Is not oily, highly perfumed, an elegant dressing. Very economical, as only a small occasional application keeps the hair in perfect condition.

The purchase by the Old Colony Railroad of the whole property of the South Boston Iron Works has been consummated and is regarded as very favorable for the company. The Old Colony is acquiring, as fast as can be done on reasonable terms, the property between its station and Federal street.—Stoughton Sentinel.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,

Editors and Publishers.

WE PUBLISHED an article last week, from a correspondent, over the signature of "X," with reference to the expenses of the graduates of our High School, which has excited some little comment—possibly on account of the novelty of some of its suggestions.

The subject of extravagance in graduation exercises, both in our schools, academies and colleges, is a fruitful source of discussion in some quarters, annually, and in many cases there is good cause for regret. The colleges near our large cities, like Yale and Harvard, are largely patronized by students whose parents are lavish with the money provided their sons. It has come to pass there that the expense of graduation seems to a poor student a small fortune. This is not the expense required by the University, to which we refer, but the incidentals, the proportionate share of which must be borne by each member of the class. To avoid much of this the young man of moderate means, dependent upon his own resources in a measure for his education, will wisely choose the humbler institutions—less pretentions, at all events,—of Amherst, Dartmouth and the like.

The story is told, so frequently that it is easily recognized, of the young lady graduate at some leading seminary, appearing, in contrast to the rest of the class, in a plain calico dress at the closing exercises. To give greater force to the story, it is of course the young lady who is the valedictorian, or the most brilliant essayist in the class. And as she steps modestly forward—this is also forcibly brought to mind—she is greeted with rounds of applause from the audience and the learned doctors of divinity who are supposed to be seated in double rows upon the platform. But we opine that the applause comes not from admiration of the young lady's appearance, so much as recognition of her courage in disregarding the usages of fashion. And it will be questioned if she has not attracted the most attention for the time being, and with few exceptions if she is not the object more of sympathy than of commendation. The moral of the story may be good as far as proving a check to the general extravagance in dress, which is manifest everywhere. But it will be hard to convince the youth of this generation that it is their duty to adopt the story literally in their appearance at graduation.

So far as any great rivalry in extravagance in dress is carried on between students themselves, or, successive classes in any institution, leading to enormous expenses attending useless frivolity, we should agree with our correspondent "X." But this is not the general purport of the article. The criticism made is local in its nature, and has reference to the present graduating class.

The burden of the offense is that the class have hired the Skating Rink for a social reception, to which only the friends of the class are bidden, and have had photographs of themselves taken for exchange with each other. This is all. We do not understand that any exceptions are taken to the exhibition in the Town Hall,—the regular graduating exercises—although an article could be written on that subject fourfold more tenable than that of our correspondent.

The members of this graduating class have been students together three years. They are to separate. It will not happen, in all human probability, that they will all meet together again. If they desire, at their own expense, to spend socially a closing evening with each other and their friends, an evening which it is possible they may have cause to recall with pleasure all their lives, we beg to say in respectful but very plain English that it is nobody's business save their own. If, again, they desire photographs of each other to remind them in the future of the school days of yore, we consider it very commendable, and a custom which should be encouraged. It will happen, ten years hence, that these pictures will be a source of great pleasure—so much so that the members would give ten times their original cost rather than be deprived of them. In the course of nature some one of them will have "passed on;" and the possession of the portrait of that comrade will be to the survivors like "precious ointment," far more precious than gold.

The objection of our correspondent "X" to these two things is, of course, the expense, and that the parents of the graduates are unable in many cases to afford it. According to the figures of our correspondent, the extravagance is less than $10 for each graduate. And we don't believe there is any parent, even if he is not a millionaire, who would envy their children the pleasure derived from the expenditure on this, to them, greatest day of their lives. No parent who has been a participant in such scenes would hesitate, were the expense even greater.

With regard to the disposition which our correspondent "X" would have made of the money thus expended,—there can be no doubt of the good it might accomplish. But there are people in our town, and elsewhere, who spend many times more than will be expended by the graduates of '85, which might be better spent in the way suggested by our correspondent, if only they could be so induced. Our correspondent should not despair. There is abundant room for missionary work in this direction elsewhere, if it is not successful with the members of the present graduating class.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Will you kindly announce to the Veteran Soldiers and Sailors of this town, whether members of the G. A. R. or otherwise, that an organization has been formed in this State, called the "Service Pension Association," of which Edward F. Rollins, 222 Franklin street, Boston, is secretary of the Executive Committee, and F. E. Farnham, of Peabody, Treasurer.

The object of the association is to maintain and advance the principle that Veterans of the War of the Rebellion, are entitled to recompense for their services in that struggle, and if possible to secure legislation necessary to put that principal into practice. No candid person, civilian or soldier will dispute the justice of this claim, after he has been fully informed in relation to it, and an opportunity will soon be afforded for all your readers to listen to some of the reasons why we should receive their unanimous support in this movement. The immediate object of these lines is to request all who now favor our purpose to contribute some small sum, say ten cents each, towards defraying the expenses of our work. Such contributions are being made in many of the towns and cities throughout the State. Friends will find a contribution box at the office of Col. C. T. Batchelder, in the Square.

THE TRIP TO NORFOLK.

The afternoon of May 23d found the writer on board the Steamer "Alleghany" of the Merchants & Miners Transportation Company, under command of Capt. Taylor, as she lay alongside Central wharf, Boston. The boats of this line are splendid iron steamships, and besides carrying immense quantities of freight has elegant appointments and commodious staterooms for passengers, and a table that is equaled on few ocean steamers. To add to the pleasure of all, the officers are gentlemen, and attentive to the passengers as well as their duties. Captain Taylor won the respect of all, and the company felt like parting with an old friend when they bid him good-by at Norfolk or Baltimore. The Alleghany is a beautiful boat, about 250 feet long by 40 feet wide, and is supplied with all the latest improvements in the shape of engines, boilers, etc. Steam power is used for revising and steering the ship, and steam capstans are used in place of the old methods. There is also a hoisting engine for loading and unloading cargoes. At convenient distances are reels of rubber hose attached to powerful pumps to be brought into immediate use in case of fire, and everything for the safety and convenience of the passengers is done by the company. We left Boston in a severe rain storm, but most of the passengers buttoned up their thick coats and spent the time on deck till we had passed the prominent places of interest in Boston Harbor. The supper bell brought together in the saloon the passengers, twenty odd in number, and a more genial crowd is seldom found. Every one talked of their trip, the prospect for fair weather, the good things the captain provided, etc. The usual flow of small talk was kept up, and when we adjourned to the deck many pleasant acquaintances had been formed which will, we trust, ripen into friendship as time advances. After passing Minot's Ledge light the company were willing to accept the comfort and cheer afforded by the saloon, elegantly furnished and lighted. Among the passengers was the well known Carl Zerrahn, who entertained the company with many anecdotes that had come under his personal observation while crossing the Atlantic in ocean steamers. One must hear Mr. Zerrahn tell a story to enjoy it, as a great deal depends on the manner in which it is told, but there is one, which we will presume to repeat here, which will be appreciated by those who have made a sailing voyage and have heard the many foolish questions asked of the officers by passengers. Mr. Zerrahn was crossing the ocean on a "Counarder" and the weather had been rough for several days. The captain, a kind hearted but gruff man, had lost considerable sleep, and was a little irritable. About the third day out, a beautiful Boston girl, with eye glasses and flaxen hair, came up to the captain and said: "This is bad weather, Captain." "Yes, very bad," in a rough voice. "Do you always have a fog here," warbled the beautiful throat of the Boston lady. "How the devil do I know; you suppose I live here," came the unexpected reply of the irritated captain. Thus the time was spent until one after another sought their staterooms. The next day was Sunday, and a thick fog set in, which alternated with rain during the day, which came down at times gently and then with driving force. So dense was the fog that only an occasional sail was seen, and the short shrill shriek of the steam whistle, every few minutes, warned any vessels in our course of our approach. Sunday was socially spent, some of the passengers relating magnified fish stories for the benefit of their male companions, or relating exaggerated accounts of disasters during a fog, for the benefit of the lady passengers, who were very nervous and were taking their first sea voyage. The first land sighted after leaving Highland light was about 7.15 on Monday morning, and we were off Cape Charles. As we entered Chesapeake Bay we passed out of the fog, and the beautiful scenery along the shore came at once upon our view. The objects of interest were pointed out as we sailed around to Norfolk, passing the Rip Raps, that unfinished fort built on an island made by human hands. A short distance away is seen the Hygeia Hotel, the destination of a number of our party. We pass boats of all descriptions in the harbor and see the oyster-man with his peculiar shaped tongs bringing up the bivalve from his bed. We are made quite at home by seeing the old Boston Harbor boat, the John Romer who is doing excellent service by running between Norfolk, Old Point and other places. At about eleven o'clock we reach the wharf and soon find ourselves roaming the streets of Norfolk. It was a trip to be remembered, a trip of some anxieties and of some sea sickness, but on the whole with more rare enjoyment to the hour than is often found in the course of a life.

NORFOLK.

The impression gained at first sight of this city is not a pleasant one. While there are many fine residences and some excellent hotels, many of the buildings are in a delapitated condition. The street paving is all cradled out and there is no pleasure in riding over them. Another thing that disgusts a visitor familiar with the cleanliness of our Northern cities is the lack of any system of sewerage. As you pass along the side walk in every house you are obliged to step over a miniature river of slops and suds which is run into the gutters along the street. There is added to this a lot of street garbage, and on both sides of the street is a running brook, the stench from which in some parts of the city is sickening. Occasionally this collection of filth becomes clogged, and at such a point the matter is hauled into the street, perhaps to lay there and be ground into dust by passing teams. About the only place of interest to visitors is the old St. Paul's Church, the only building left standing from the 1776 fire. It is built of glazed brick brought from England, and was erected in 1739. The church is overgrown with ivy and on the south corner can be seen imprinted in the bricks a small cannon ball, which was fired from one of the British ships in 1776. Connected with it is an ancient churchyard with grave stones dating back to 1700, while overhanging all are beautiful shade trees and fragant magnolia bushes. Norfolk is one of the principal ports for shipping in the South. There is a cotton press there said to be the largest and finest in the world, and large quantities of cotton and tobacco are shipped annually.

THE STEVEDORE.

The loading and unloading of freight from the large steamships, is no small business, and to the stranger, gazing upon the stevedores as they rush to and fro, all seems confusion and uproar, but a careful observation shows there is a regular system to the work, and the freight is easily handled. At Norfolk the work is done almost entirely by negroes, some 300 or more are provided with trucks and stationed over them, only a short distance apart, are men called drivers, whose duty it is if he sees an inclination on the part of a negro to shirk his work, to drive him along and make him keep his place in the continual moving procession. In Boston where this work is done by white men, forty cents an hour is paid, but at Norfolk the price is fifteen cents, and the stevedore earns about three dollars a week on an average. On this he supports with the assistance of his wife, who usually takes in washing, a family of from five to fourteen children. While about his work, the negro is continually singing and shouting, and it seems as if the more noise they could make, the more work they could do. When their work is done, they report to the office, the roll is called and each receives his pay, and five minutes later, those hard working darkies are sleeping soundly on bails of cotton, or in shaded corners about the wharf.

THE COLOR LINE.

The color line is very marked, and to us accustomed to the belief that "all men are created equal," it seems at times an outrage to treat the colored people in the manner we have seen them treated. On all the boats plying between different points in the vicinity of Norfolk, the colored person is obliged to stay on a certain side of the ship, and not allowed to mingle with the white passengers, although the latter can go where he pleases, and if perchance the negro should forget this regulation, and go to the other side of the boat, he is immediately notified by an officer where he belongs. A white man and negro may be obliged to associate together while about their day's work, but in the evening, should they meet each other on the street, they pass in silent contempt. On board the boat, Excelsior, of the Potomac Steamship Company, coming from Washington to Old Point Comfort, we made the acquaintance of a young colored man who had just graduated from the Howard University, at Georgetown, and who had entered the employ of the Washington Daily Republican, to travel throughout the South as correspondent for that paper. He was a young man of pleasant address and fine education. When supper was announced, we started for the saloon, and when about to sit down at the table, our colored friend was informed that he must wait until the rest of the passengers were through. This is only a single instance of many that are occurring daily.

The funeral of the late conductor William Auld took place at North Berwick, Wednesday. About a hundred friends went down from this vicinity in a special car. The funeral was attended by the masons of Berwick and Wells, and the Berwick band. Among the floral offerings was one from the Maine Central conductors in the shape of a coupon ticket. Every word on a coupon ticket was in the flower piece. The Eastern people sent a broken shaft, an elegant anchor with chain and an open book; on one page was the word "Billy;" on the other the word "closed." The singing at the funeral was by the Eastern railroad quartette.

PEABODY.

N. W. Edson & Co. make their bow to the public through the columns of the PRESS to-day. They have taken the two stores in Sutton's Block, recently occupied by George H. Jacobs and E. C. Spofford. The two stores have virtually been made into one, by removing the mason work and substituting a glass partition and doors with glass panels. A new show window on the corner of Wallis street has been cut through making the store lighter and more attractive. The store next to Wallis street will contain the groceries, and the shelves are loaded with canned goods, table oils, pickles, extracts, etc. On the lower shelf are neatly painted cans containing teas and coffees. In this room there are thirty-seven feet of counter and several fine nickle plated show cases made of French plate glass. At the lower end is an office dividing the partition and doing service for both stores, and a telephone has been put in here for the convenience of their customers. Both stores are finished in imitation of cherry. Passing through the door you enter the meat and provision department. Near the entrance is a Whitman's Improved butter cooler. It is arranged so that whole tubs of butter are kept in sight and protected by a glass front. When a piece is to be cut off it swings round bringing the butter outside and in position to cut. The ice chest underneath will hold about 15 tubs at a time. This room is fitted elegantly with marble slabs, and in the rear is a large ice chest with a capacity of 3300 pounds a day. There are also set soapstone tanks for corn beef. The ice is received at the rear, and put in without going through the store. The basement will be used for storage of their surplus supply of goods. The firm consists of N. W. Edson, C. F. Edson & Wm. H. Emmerson. We trust the new firm will meet with the success they deserve.

Eugene T. McCarthy, Esq., has been obliged to decline the invitation to act as one of the judges of writing and drawing by the school children, on account of other duties, and Mr. John F. Nugent has been appointed in his place.

Improvements have just been made in the dry and fancy goods store of Miss Annie Hackett on Main street, by the taking down of a partition and adding another room, making a very roomy store for her rapidly increasing business.

Last Thursday morning the police raided on the house of John Carney on Sherman street, and found a barrel of beer under a pile of wood in the cellar. They also captured a pan of the liquor. This is the third seizure from Carney within six weeks.

A little daughter of Mrs. Frank Bailey started out on an exploring expedition last Sunday, and was found in Blubber Hollow by the Salem police, and was returned to its anxious parents. The little one is only two and a half years of age.

E. A. Rich's horse ran away in Salem, last Thursday, tipping over the wagon and spilling the lacteal fluid into the gutter on North street. The horse was captured and only slight damage done the wagon. This is the first result of the call for a drop in milk.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Some person or persons entered the room of the Atlantic B. B. Association, in Blaney's block, on Foster street, between Thursday and Friday nights, and with a sharp knife cut the tapestry upholstering of four lounges, fine pictures, the top of a desk, and the whole center of the carpet. The cuts on the lounges and carpet are several feet in length and are all the same, one long cut and a cross cut. The damage is estimated at from $100 to $150, and was done out of "pure cussedness." At the last meeting of the club seven members of the club were expelled for non-payment of dues, and six others were laid over until the next meeting. One of the expelled members gave up his keys and went out in good grace, but the others held on to their keys. The ones who perpetrated the acts of vandalism got into the room by the use of the regular keys, and the suspicions of the club are fixed on those who did not give up the keys. The matter is in the hands of the police.

The quarterly session of the Essex County Sunday School Union was held at the Universalist Church in Marblehead, last Wednesday afternoon and evening, Amos Merrill of this town presiding. After the prayer by Rev. Anson Titus of Salisbury, Rev. George J. Sanger of Essex gave an address on the "Value of Reverence and Study of Details to the Sunday School." The subject was discussed by Rev. F. W. Sprague and Mr. Merrill of Peabody, Rev. S. B. Smith of East Boston, Rev. W. H. Rider of Gloucester, Rev. N. R. Wright of Lynn, Anson Titus of Salisbury, Mrs. Maria H. Bray of Gloucester, and others. In the evening Rev. F. W. Sprague gave an address on "Teaching," followed by discussion. There were about 300 delegates present from Salem, Lynn, Peabody, Gloucester, Danvers, Essex and Swampscott. The next meeting will be held in Beverly.

Mr. H. Coleman Farrington, who fell from the Bleachery House, on Washington street, May 21, died from the effect of his injuries at the Salem Hospital last Sunday. The physicians had hoped to save the broken leg, but blood poisoning set in and the limb was amputated, but the patient had not sufficient vitality to survive the operation. Mr. Farrington was at one time a member of Union Post 50 G. A. R., and during the war was in Capt. Devereaux's Company, of the 19th Regiment, being color bearer at the battle of Fredericksburg, where he was wounded, and from which he suffered the remainder of his life. He was a carpenter by trade, and respected by the community. He leaves a widow and nine children.

Died in Lynn, June 5th, at the residence of her son, Philura, widow of the late Richard Plumer, aged 76 years and 9 mos. She was a resident of Peabody over 40 years, and will be remembered by many friends here, of whom she spoke affectionately in her last hours. She was a devoted christian. Truly it may be said of her she hath done what she could and our loss will be her eternal gain. She was buried at Pine Grove Cemetery in Lynn. Funeral services were held at the residence of her only son, Mr. Oliver Plumer, on Western Avenue.

There was a sensational report on the street yesterday, that a boy named Daniel Crosby had been drowned at High Bridge, last Monday, two of his companions going so far as to say they saw him fall into the water. As the boy was not at home, his parents put the case in the hands of the police. A search had hardly commenced when the missing youth got off the Lowell train at 7 o'clock last evening. He had walked to Lowell and found his brother who sent him home by the train.

Three young men in a state of intoxication were in a buggy driving through the square last Monday, when they were overhauled by Chief Peasley, and he was piloting them team and all to the station house, when one of their number jumped out and escaped. A second attempted it, but soon found himself in the hands of the officer and the two were in the police court yesterday morning and gave the names of Andrew Ford and Charles F. Norwood of Lynn. The judge fined them $1 and costs each.

About three weeks ago some fiend entered the barn of Mr. Michael Martin on Fulton street, and with a hatchet or some other instrument struck Mr. Martin's horse in the breast, making a wound from which the poor animal has suffered much, and it is feared cannot recover. A person guilty of such an act should be punished to the full extent of the law should he be caught. Spite and jealousy are evidently at the bottom of the affair, although Mr. Martin is an upright and honest man.

About twenty went from this town to West Peabody, in Pillsbury barge "Our Nine," Thursday evening, bound for a good time, in which they were successful. Their destination was the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Flint, who invited a large number of friends to a house warming, there being about twenty from Salem, thirty-five from Peabody and the Danvers crowd, making in all about seventy-five present. There was plenty of fun, and music on banjos, violin, guitar, accordeon and organ, Mr. Norris, of Norris and Semons, musical artists of Salem, taking part. An excellent supper was partaken of in the barn and dancing was among the evening's amusements. The host and hostess were presented an easy chair, silver cake basket, and other articles. The Danvers folks arrived home at two o'clock yesterday morning and reported having a very enjoyable time. Mrs Flint is a daughter of Charles Colby of this town.—Danvers Mirror.

The committee having in charge the matter of dedicating the monument just completed and placed in position at Danvers in memory of Rebecca Nourse, held a meeting recently to arrange a programme for the occasion. The time is fixed for July 30, which, under the old style, will be the 193d anniversary of the execution. The meeting will be held at the First Church in Danvers Centre, whence an adjournment will be made to the Nourse homestead, where the monument is erected in the family burial lot, where the monument will be dedicated.

We have to chronicle to-day the death of Mr. Joseph Moore. Nearly a year ago, (June 20, 1884) Mr. Moore was stricken with a paralytic shock and has since that time been unable to help himself, needing the constant attendance of a nurse. For the past three months he has been gradually growing weaker until he died at four o'clock this morning. Mr. Moore was a carpenter by trade and superintended the erection of most of the large buildings of the Essex Glue Company. He was also head carpenter at the Bleachery for a number of years. He was a member of Essex Lodge I. O. O. F. of Salem, of Jordan Lodge, F. & A. Masons, the Legion of Honor and the New England Relief Association. For several years he was a member of the So. Church and during his long sickness he has borne his pain and trouble with a christian's faith. He was born in Gloucester and was 64 years of age. His funeral will take place from his late residence on Holten street, Friday afternoon.

Rev. W. G. Sperry returned to Peabody from Moosehead Lake on Wednesday. He had good success catching fish, but had the luck to lose the best part of his catch, that he proposed to bring home. He prepared a barrel with holes in it, and anchored it in the lake, so that he could keep his catch alive until he was ready to come home. He had a good string of fish weighing from four and one-half pounds downwards in the barrel, but a storm arose Monday night and wrecked the barrel. He enjoyed his trip very much, as did C. A. Haskell and S. E. Cassino who were of the party.—Globe.

Beside the locomotive already sent to the B. & M. road the Mason Works are building three others for the same corporation. They are to weigh 97,000 pounds each. The cylinders are 17x22, drivers 69 inches, journals 7 1-2x8, boilers 52 inches, grates 35x72. The boilers are to have 199 steel tubes 12 feet long and 2 inches in diameter. The smoke arch is to be 71 inches and the stacks straight. The wheels have Krupp's steel tires. The tenders will be 17 feet long and 88 inches wide.

A large number of improvements have been made in the tannery of the late Isaac Hardy and the place is now in readiness for the tanning of calf skins, which will be carried on by Dahl & Co. The new firm have put in a bark mill and several new leaches and the ground bark will be carried by conveyors direct to the leaches and the liquors from them to the vats. They will for the present employ about 25 men.

It was expected that the suit of the trustees of the Brown estate brought against the town about a year ago would be called to-day. This is a suit for $3500 damage to the property, by improvements made by the water board about the pond some time ago. It is rather a "gauzy" affair, as we learn that the town exempted the estate from taxation, for the benefit of the widow.

If you have time and inclination try this puzzle:—If a man puts $100 in a bank the day he is twenty-one years of age, what sum must he add to it yearly to have $50,000 on the day he is fifty years of age, receiving six per cent. compound interest on his money.

A Peabody boy named Durkee caught about a dozen and a half of fine large alewives in the brook which crosses the road near the ice houses in Wenham, Saturday. He caught the fish in his hand and said the water was black with them.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

The third and last game of polo between the Peabodys and Somervilles took place last evening at the rink before a small audience, and in fact all the games have been very poorly attended. During these games there has been some of the finest polo playing seen here this winter, and if they had played in that style during the league games, no doubt they would have stood a good second. The game was called at 8.45 by referee Symonds. The first rush was obtained by Bickford of the visitor's club and the goal was won in 1 m. by the Somervilles. The second rush was won by Waterhouse and the goal was given to the Peabodys by three fouls of the Somervilles in 8 m. The third rush was secured by Bickford, and during this goal there were two fouls given to both clubs, but it was secured by Phalen in 5 m. and 45 s. The fourth rush was also won by Bickford and the goal by Waterhouse in 2 m. The Somervilles are a fine set of young men and are excellent polo players, and won many friends during their short stay in town.

Reed, Cook and Staniford, of the Salems, played with the Globes of Haverhill last evening against the Woburns, and were defeated by 3 to 1 by that club.

BASE BALL NOTES.

The Peabody and Salem High School nines played a league game of ball last Wednesday, in Salem, resulting in a victory for the Peabody's by a score of 26 to 12.

The High School nine will play a game of ball with the Son's of Veterans nine of Marblehead, at a picnic at Naugus Head on the 17th.

Last Saturday afternoon the High School Reserves were defeated by the Actives in a nine inning game 17 to 0.

The High School Reserves visited Salem to play a game of ball with the Reserves of that city, but as they did not put in an appearance the game was forfeited to the Peabodys 9 to 0.

The Peabody and Beverly High School base ball nines played a game of ball at Beverly yesterday and at the close of the ninth inning the score stood 18 to 18. At this point there was a misunderstanding and the game was given to the Beverlys 9 to 0. The League managers will be asked to settle the dispute.

Imagine our feelings on returning from a vacation of two weeks in which "no thought for the morrow" was given, to find on our desk a spring poem. We give one verse and inform the person who left it that he would never have left the office alive had we been at home:

> "The lawns are coming out green and bright,
> The fish now begin to bite,
> The laborer is up as soon as it is light.
> Some people continue to get tight,
> And all the world is a beautiful sight."

Last Thursday, while clearing the edge of a splitting knife at the factory of R. H. Brown & Co.'s, Sylvanus Chadwick received a severe cut on the inside of his right hand. The accident was caused by the breaking of the clearing stone. Dr. Weston dressed the wound. Mr. Chadwick has been singularly unfortunate in this respect, having lost parts of several of his fingers by the splitting machine.

The children around Central street and vicinity got a sweet mess last Wednesday afternoon. George W. Pepper dumped a number of barrels of rubbish and old water soaked confectionery on the Warren street dump, and the pile was thoroughly overhauled all that afternoon and evening, a crowd of forty or fifty children being present all the time.

The police have arrested Patrick Walsh, Timothy Lane and Martin Tierney, lads about thirteen years of age, for breaking into the furniture store of C. H. Goulding some time ago. They came before Judge Merrill this afternoon and plead guilty. The cases were continued till Saturday and state officer Hull notified.

Charles A. Thomas and his son Henry went to Wenham Friday and caught three as handsome brook trout as were ever seen in this town. The largest weighed just two pounds, while the other two tipped the scales at one and one-half and half a pound respectively. Had the rain not set in just then, they would have got many more of the same kind.

Parties who visited Charlestown State Prison, last Friday, saw Billy Hayes who was at work in the yard. There is no truth in the report that he is sick, as they found him in the best of health and confident of getting through his term all right. He did not like the prison fare at first.

Patrick Huse, a South Peabody soap grease collector, got drunk in Salem, last Friday, and fell from his team, cutting a gash ten inches long on his head. It took eleven stitches to close the wound.

The graduating class of the High School numbers nineteen this year. The class will hold a reception at the skating rink Tuesday evening, June 29.

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter, which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils or throat, and frequently by both channels.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individual at different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing, and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of a notable size, on which traces of blood may at times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant snuffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertions. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical or mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, loss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lighthill to decide on the first examination as to the cureability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of and affections of the Nervous system from whatever cause.

The Rime of Sir Lionne.

Hush, a little, for harp and rhyme;
This befell in the olden time.
—W. Allingham.

In days of old, as rimesters tell
(Culvert, and petrol, and mangonel),
A maiden dwelt in a castle stout,
Guarded and walled, within, without,
And ever defeat and direful rout
To all her castle's besiegers fell.

No suitor the maid's proud heart could win,
(Pike, and halberd, and calverin);
She recked not of love-kiss, no vow, no sigh,
But her song had the ring of a battle-cry;
"O, strong is my fortress—a maid am I—
And never a foeman shall enter in."

But it fell in an evening windy-wet
(Hauberk, and helmet, and bascinet),
A knight drew rein 'neath the castle wall;
Proud was his port, his stature tall,
His face held the gazer's eye in thrall,
And a lion of gold on his casque was set.

He winded a bugle silver-clear
(Mace, and arblast, and bandoleer),
Singing: "Yield up thy castle, fair May, to me;
Sir Lionne me hight, of a far countrie.
Now boune thee, lady, my love to be,
Or I take thee by prowess of bow and spear."

In the pale, pale light of a crescent moon
(Spear, and corselet, and musketoon),
She saw him there by the castle wall,
And shrilled to the warder a careless call:
"Ho—let portcullis and drawbridge fall;
We would see this bold knight of a braggart tune."

And oh! but the wind had changed, I trow
(Falchion, and gauntlet, and good crossbow),
When, an eve from thence, in a fading light,
On the bastion-keep stood a maid and knight,
And, while to his heart he clasped her tight,
"Thou hast conquered, Sir Lionne!" she murmured low.

"I had vowed that no knight beneath the sun
(Demi-pique, helm, and habergeon),
Beneath the sunlight, or moonbeam shine,
Should be lord of this castle and heart of mine!
But take me, dear love, I am only thine;
My fortress is taken, my heart is won."
—Chambers' Journal.

Mr. Garrett's Wealth.

Mr. Garrett himself has said more than once during the past few months to gentlemen intimately concerned with business affairs in which he was prominent that he had so provided and arranged in his will that there would be no such change in the existing status of his holdings of various securities as would at all disturb other interests. Of greatest importance, of course, is the stock of the Baltimore and Ohio, of which he was not only the largest individual shareholder, but even a holder to a greater extent than the city of Baltimore or the Johns Hopkins estate. The "Garrett interest," in fact, amounts, it is stated, to very nearly two-sevenths of the entire capital of the company. The aggregate capital stock is $14,792,266, or 147,925.66 shares, of the par value of $100. It is estimated that the Garrett interest amounts to about 40,000 shares. The market quotation of the stock is 175—or 75 per cent above par.

Estimates of the wealth of Mr. Garrett, made by persons who have had close business relations with him, vary greatly and range all the way from $5,000,000 to $30,000,000. Besides the common stock of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, he owned, it is said, considerable amounts of the preferred stocks and bonds of the railroad, and had invested largely in the securities of the branch and connecting roads of the system. Among these have been most prominently mentioned the Pittsburg and Connellsville, the Cincinnati, Washington and Baltimore, the Central Ohio and the Washington branch. He is said to have been a holder, too, of stocks or bonds in various Eastern, Western and Southern railways, of government bonds, of Maryland and Virginia state securities, of Baltimore city stock, and of stock in a number of banks and other financial and commercial corporations in the city. The banking house of Robert Garrett & Sons has a large and very valuable business and Mr. Garrett was also a special partner in the firm of Pope & Cole, extensive copper and general metal dealers.

His investments in real estate were very large and widely distributed. Besides his residence he owned other property on Mount Vernon place. "Montebello," his country place, is splendidly improved, embracing over one thousand acres of fine land, and is stocked abundantly with the best and most valuable cattle, sheep and swine. In his farming and stock raising operations, Mr. Garrett took great personal interest, and also in his gardens, hot-houses, and conservatories. His horses were not the fastest, but they were all of fine stock, and from his pairs, driven to a broad, strong, but rather light, double buggy, he got very good speed always. Besides Montebello, he owned several fine places in Baltimore County. In the city his real estate embraced factories, warehouses, office buildings, and dwelling houses. Some of the best warehouse property in the city belonged to him, and he had added largely to the number of his office buildings in the past fifteen years, particularly in the neighborhood of South and German streets—Baltimore American.

A Sabbatarian Hen.

Some months ago Mr. George Colton, favorably known as a breeder of poultry of the highest grade, presented to the young son of a friend a pair of white Seabright chickens of rare beauty in appearance. When taken to their new home, near the city boundary, one of the hens began to lay eggs, and has continued to do so without any intermission, except on Sundays, up to the present day. Every precaution and test has been used to discover if the aforesaid hen had in any way labored on the Sabbath day, but among the ten or twelve in the family it is the unanimous conviction that she observes the Sabbath in every way, as a Sabbatarian should. Her boy owner contends with all seriousness that the hen respects the Sabbath. He watches the chicken-house carefully, keeps it under lock and key, and finds an egg in the nest daily except on Sunday. His wonder is how Mr. Colton could have so trained his chicken in youth, so that when it became a hen she "did not depart from it," and concludes it is the result of a good example. He cannot understand it any other way.—Baltimore American.

San Francisco is becoming famous for her court trials, and her reputation is not likely to suffer soon, as she has on the docket a libel suit in which expert testimony will have to be taken as to the definition of the word "dude."

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY CURES A TERRIBLE CASE OF GRAVEL WHEN OTHER HELP FAILED.

What is Gravel? what causes it, and who are most liable to it? It is frequently attended with acute pain, and unless relief can be found, produces inflammation and death. Both sexes and all ages are liable to it, although men who have reached or passed middle age are its most common victims. Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable medicine for Gravel, as the disease seems on the increase, and we are glad to say that such a specific is now before the public in the form of DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter, selected from many similar communications:

PITTSFIELD, MASS., March, 1884.

Dr David Kennedy.

Dear Sir:—You have a right to know, and I desire the public to know my experience with Gravel and my remarkable recovery through the use of your "FAVORITE REMEDY." I am a carpenter living in this place, and there are plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of Gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away, and I had little more trouble until last July, 1883. One day when at work in my shop I was suddenly seized with a keen and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said: "I can do nothing for you. Your case is incurable!" I was frightened and went to the second, who said little, but gave me a prescription. It did no good.

Then began a series of experiences the agony and horror of which words cannot depict. Think of it! I was sometimes taken in the street, and would fall, writhing with agony, upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven, I then heard of 'KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY," through Mr. P. P. Cooley. I had not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was nearly one-half an inch long. I persevered with the medicine, the symptoms gradually abated, and I have had no more trouble since. I am well, thanks to you and "FAVORITE REMEDY." Yours most gratefully,

JAMES D. KENNEDY.

What "FAVORITE REMEDY" did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to do so Address—Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

FAVORITE REMEDY

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5, by all druggists.

Book Notices.

The July Harper's promises to be one of unusually varied interest. It will contain the beginning of Howell's new story. "Indian Summer," besides further instalment of Miss Woolson's "East Angels." A new article in the series on great American industries, "A Silk Dress." A paper describing Buffalo is one of the most brilliant of the descriptions of American cities which Harper's has from time to time published. "A Day's Drive with Montana Cowboys," by the artist Zogbaum, and a pleasant paper on "Ampersand" in the Adirondacks. Also "Midsummer at Mount Desert," by Mrs. Mace, with illustrations by Harry Fenn. Gen. Butler contributes an article giving the complete history of his yacht America. Among the stories is an amusing one of "His Royal Highness's Love Affair," illustrated, and another by the humorist Burdette. The frontispiece is a characteristic picture by F. S. Church, of "Pandoro."

He Didn't Carve.

A nice, fresh young dude was invited into the country to spend a few days at a plain farmer's to secure a needed relaxation without excitement. He was æsthetic and accomplished, but his friends watched him the first morning of his arrival and the cows didn't eat him. He was safe at dinner time (12 o'clock), and taking his place at the table he watched the lady of the house carving a chicken. She noticed him, and to relieve the embarassment inquired:

"Um, Mr. Fitzclarence, do you carve?"

"Aw, I beg yoah pahdon," he replied, startled from his revery.

"I didn't do anything. I only asked if you carved."

"Beg pahdon, no. I nevva acquiahed the accomplishment, you knaw, but I paint rawthaw well, you knaw, on chinaw, faw an amatah, and I pwopose taking cahving lessons at the acahdemy this wintaw, you knaw."

The poor lady let her knife slip, and Mr. Fitzclarence had to be taken out to the horse-trough to get the gravy off his clothes.—Merchant Traveler.

T. W. Webb writes to Notes and Queries: The little church of Craswall, in Herefordshire, close to the site of a Cistercian abbey of that name, and lying under the great wall of the Hatrel or Black Mountains, which form the Western frontier of Wales, has recently been restored by the incumbent, Rev. C. L. Eagles, to whom I am indebted for the following illustration of the ancient state of ecclesiastical affairs in that very remote neighborhood: "On the north side of the church is an old cock-pit; an old man who died in 1869, aged 96, told me he had been at many a cock-fight there. 'People did come from all parts, and after sarvice did fight the cocks. Ah! People did come to church in them days.' There were stands of gingerbread at the time of fighting, and people came from Clifford, Dorstone, the Hay, and even Talgarth—a little town nine miles or more distant. The pit remains as a memento of the past."

Those who remember the wooden cogs and screws of the cider mill of the olden time would open their eyes at the process of cider-making in New England now. By means of a grinder, as many bushels can be grated in a minute as there are horse-powers used in operating the machinery. An elevator carries the apples to the hopper as fast as they can be used up. The pomace falls directly upon a platform, and when the cheese is complete the platform revolves like a railroad turntable. The cider is strained through racks and cloths. Tanks in the basement are provided for catching the juice, and by means of a pump it is brought into its various receptacles.

THREE EFFECTS.—The thousands remarkable cures which have been accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla are due simply to three effects which this great medicine has upon those who take it:

First, It purifies the blood.

Second, It strengthens the system.

Third, It gives healthy action to the digestive organs.

With these three effects no disease can long retain its hold. It is forced to leave the system, giving place to health and strength, through the potent influence of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists. Try it.

Why cannot women make good lawyers?" asks an exchange. Because they can't sit on the small of their backs, pile their feet on a table and charge $15 a minute for it.

WHAT PARENTS FEAR.—Many persons, especially parents, object to many quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's Tonic does not involve this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor.

"Ah, Dudley, I understand you are to be congratulated. Is the fair one pretty?" "No, can't say she is." "Good figure?" "Yes, 'bout half a million.

THE HOME OF MR. BLAINE.—WASHINGTON, D. C. The son of Senator Frye, of Maine, who has been suffering from a severe cold, which settled on his chest, was cured by a few doses of Red Star Cough Cure. He publicly endorses it as prompt, pleasant and safe. Dr. Cox calls it the best remedy. It contains no opiates or poisons.

Salary, expenses and a permanent business is offered in another column by the C. L. VanDusen Nursery Co. Their Nurseries are favorably known.

About 3.40 o'clock last Thursday morning the sound of a whistle blowing warned our firemen that a fire was in progress in this vicinity, and upon turning out it was found that the fire was in Danvers, and the heavy volumes of black smoke which could be seen rolling up proclaimed a heavy fire. No general alarm was given in this town although one was expected. An alarm was given some little time previous for a fire in Beverly, and some members of Hose 5 had heard the alarm and seen the fire, and thought it was in Peabody. They rang their bell and started with their carriage, but did not know of the Danvers fire until nearly down to the Square, when they found that neither blaze was in their limits. Some of the Peabody firemen started for Danvers, and soon found that the fire was the large shoe manufactory of E. and A. Mudge, at Danvers Centre, which, together with the building on the north side of the shop occupied as a store and dwelling by David S. Brown, and a small store house in the rear of the store, the stable of Mr. Mudge, and a dwelling house occupied by families named Jamison and Robbins, were burned flat. The Mudge shop was 125 feet by 33 feet and four stories high with an attic. Charles Murchusion, of Lynn, who is the watchman of the factory was lasting shoes when he heard a slight explosion in the rear of the shop. This was at 3.15 A. M. Upon going to ascertain the cause he found the building on the east end all in flames. He attempted to sound an alarm on the whistle but the rope was burned off. He then ran to the stand pipe and turned on the water but the fire soon drove him away. An alarm was finally given from the whistle on Farwell's shop at the Plains and the firemen aroused, but nothing could be done to save the buildings then on fire and all efforts were centered on the surronuding property. The stand pipe inside the building having burst, the force of the water from the main was so diminished that a stream would hardly reach a few feet beyond the pipe. The factory and its surrounding were soon burned flat to the ground, so clean that ruins enough could not be found to fill a freight car. Considerable stock in process of manufacture was consumed together with about 8000 feet of upper leather bought the day before. The heat was so great that the fly wheel of the engine was melted. About 200 hands were employed in the factory. The loss is estimated at about $100,000, on which there is an insurance, placed through the agency of O. B. Chadwick & Co., of this town, of $82,400 in 55 companies. The firm are now running in a part of the Martin, Clapp & French factory at Tapleyville, and will probably rebuild at once. The town of Danvers sees the need of a steamer by this time, having had three large fires where their water works failed them in the time of need.

Beverly had an $8000 fire at 3 o'clock the same morning of the Danvers fire, the old Dodge grist mill near the Rial Side, in use as a mill for grinding rubber by the Beverly Rubber Company. It was in operation up to 11 o'clock of the night before. The building was a total loss, no insurance being placed on it.

Last Wednesday afternoon fire was discovered in the ell of J. Fred Ingraham's house in West Peabody and before it could be extinguished had damaged the roof and upper part of the building to the extent of $150, insured in the American Firemen's Company of Phil. placed through the agency of James. H. Thomas. No alarm was given in town, the fire being fought by the hands from the morocco factory.

Capt. Frank G. Woodbury, of the Leominster fire department, was in town Wednesday night.

At the meeting of the Board of Engineers, held last Wednesday evening, Engineers Roome, Reed, Johnson and Buxton being present, Thomas L. Neagle was appointed in Hose 4 in place of Charles H. Stanton and John Calvert to Hose 2 in place of U. A. Brophy. The by laws of Hose 3 and Steamer 1 were approved. It was voted to exchange the breastplates of Hose Carriage harnesses, and Buxton and Johnson were appointed to procure a harness for Hose 5. Voted to pay stewards of companies outside the Central Station $30 per year. Chief Roome was authorized to advertise for proposals for coal.

Janitor Smart was in Concord, N. H., last Thursday. H. J. G. Kimball acted as janitor for the day.

M. W. Cummings has been papering and painting the inside of the house of Hose 2. In tearing the paper off the walls, the pictures of a full rigged ship was disclosed, with a pennant flying from the mast head with the words "Eagle No. 5" painted on it. This house formerly stood where Sutton Hall now stands and was occupied by Eagle No.5. hand engine.

It is probable that ex-Assistant Geo .O. Pierce, now a member of Hose 2. Peabody, will succeed Captain J. H. Tibbetts as assistant engineer.—Sunday Globe. Doubtful.

George A. Voorhees, Esq., has presented Steamer No. 2. of Salem, with a pair of handsome and valuable panel pictures.—Sunday Globe.

It was Steamer 2. of Peabody, of which Mr. Voorhees is a member.

Chief Engineer William J. Roome has accepted a position with S. B. Winn & Son of Salem. He drives a team on the Peabody routes. It is understood that he intends to resign from the Board of Engineers and that his resignation will be handed in this week. During his short term as Chief he has gained the respect of the firemen under his command. The names of candidates for the vacant place on the Board are already numerous, among them being Ex-Engineers Lord and Pierce, Foreman John A. Hart of Steamer 1, T. E. Wilson of the same company, Asst. Foreman H. A. Southwick of H. & L., and S. S. Littlefield. It is said that Engineer John H. Tibbetts is negotiating for a sale of his eating house in Salem, and if so, he will probably remain in town and on the board.

Ex-Chief Atkins of Marblehead was in town Sunday, and visited the Central Station. Chief Roome has placed an order with him for nine feet of 2 1-2 inch suction hose for Steamer 2.

The time for the payment of dues for the Relief Association runs out next Monday, the 15th. We hope to see the name of every member in the department on the rolls at that time.

S. S. Littlefield, who is mentioned for the Board of Engineers, served in the fire department of this town up to the time of the adoption of the high service, both in the old and new steamers, having been the first foreman of the new steamer and serving in that capacity for a number of years. He is well fitted for the position as he has had considerable experience in assisting in the management of fires in this town.

One year ago this morning the firemen were called out to work on what at that time, was the largest fire in this town, since the big fire in 1843. The fire at Pinder & Winchester's by which property to the amount of $78,195.22 on which there was an insurance of $73,395.22 was destroyed between 1.45 and 5.30 A. M. of that morning. Since then we have had the Upton fire.

Engineer S. H. Buxton is on the sick list, being threatened with a fever.

A special meeting of the Directors of the Relief Association will be held at the Central Station, Monday evening, June 15th at 7.30 o'clock.

Engine No. 4, of Boston, has just had a hose wagon built by the Abbott Downing Co., of Concord, N. H., of the same pattern as the Peabody wagon, only differently painted. z

The following notice was sent to the different papers in Salem, last Friday:

Salem, June 5, 1885.

Albert J. Mondor of Lawrence, Mass., formerly a resident of this city, and a man unknown, one of his friends, were drowned this forenoon while fishing this side of Baker's island. A party of friends are looking for their bodies. Mr. Mondor was married only six months, and was employed by his father-in-law, Jas. Corillard the grocer, 90 Franklin Street, Lawrence, Mass. A reward will be offered for the finding of his body.

It turns out now that Mondor was sent to Fall River to collect some $500 due his employer, and it is thought that Mondor had used the money himself and sent in the notices of his death.

UNLUCKY.—The last horse car from Peabody on Tuesday night got off the track, and after it had been righted then the kerosene lamp got on fire. The conductor threw it into the street and put gravel upon it until the blaze was extinguished.—Beverly Citizen.

NOTES
Mulcahy

"Don't let the newspaper fellows get hold of it" was the remark of one of our engineers to a friend after relating an experience he had had a few days before while fishing. He had decided to visit the western part of the town and spend the day in fishing and had probably resolved in his mind several "fish stories" which would astonish his associates at the next meeting of the engineers. Reaching his destination he unfurled his fishing tackle and sat in the hot sun for a while, but not meeting with success he decided to find the shady side of the pond, and started across a boggy piece of land. When about halfway across he got mired, and he made several unsuccessful attempts to extricate himself, and being a man of large proportion and weighing perhaps 200 pounds, it was not an easy job and he spent most of the balance of the day in reaching solid ground. After sunset he was reported safely at home without a fish, but a suit of clothes that looked as if they had done fire duty for years and a pretty good story about his day's adventures, which were confided to a few trusted friends, but somehow it leaked out.

That the prohibition of the sale of lager beer in this town effects not only the common people but the professional as well, is illustrated by the fact that one evening recently, one of our dignified professional men, who writes "D. S." after his name, boarded a street car near the Salem line, and as he seated himself in the corner, a smile went round among the other passengers and some boys on the out side were wicked enough to guy him about what he had in his pocket. This directed attention to his pockets and from each could be seen the metal stops of a lager beer bottle. The professional man blushed deeply, and hastily covered the protruding beer bottles with his hands and only wished he had four hands instead of two.

Most of our troubles are magnified. One of our retired leather men was sitting on the piazza of his house last Monday, when he saw a couple of innocent red ants crawling up his stocking and at once he imagined they were building a nest in the seat of his pants. He was sure he could feel them crawl and bite until he retired to the house, disrobed and made a thorough search, then he found out his mistake.

When a fellow has chased a rabit of the issue of 1885 through a briar patch and has fallen over two or three old logs, acquiring broken shins and a coat of cob-webs, and then just when he goes to cage the possessor of the venerable tail under his hat, it slips into a hole that was prepared for it from the beginning, there is no thought so consoling as the reflection that the little beast has fleas, is there Bill?

SOUTH PEABODY.

Amos Raddin is making great improvements in and around the Baldwin house at the corner of County street.

C. W. Julyn's ice cart broke down on Lynn street Tuesday night.

The cellar for a new house on Lynn street is nearly completed on the land formerly owned by Mrs. Sanborn. J. F. Moody will build the house.

The house occupied by Nathaniel Putnam is very much improved by a set of blinds.

Mr. Albert Stone has built him a hennery adjoining his residence on Lynnfield street.

The Lynn & Peabody horse cars run on half hour time last Sunday, and did a large business.

Mrs. Leighton desires us to say that our So. Peabody correspondent was in error last week, in saying that the accident to her son, happened a half mile from the school house, when it really occurred in the yard after school hours. [Editor.

The case of Mrs. Crosby vs the Peabody & Lynn Horse Railroad Company for damages, was settled yesterday by the company paying $100. This is the case where the plaintiff offered two local tickets for a through fare, which was refused by Conductor Lewis, and she claimed she was put off the car and contracted a cold. Last year the court allowed her $225, but it was set aside as being excessive.

The police were called to South Peabody this noon to take charge of a woman who had been hanging around in the vicinity of Newhall's greenhouses since Tuesday night. They found her lying in the lane leading to Newhall's crossing. They brought her to the Station House and telephoned to the Asylum and found out that she was an insane person named Mary Pendergrass who had escaped a few days ago. The authorities from the Asylum came down and took charge of her.

Next Sunday will be observed as Children's Sunday at South and West Peabody. A special service will be held at West Peabody, at 10.30 A. M., and at South Peabody at 2 P. M. There will also be a Sunday School concert at South Peabody, in the evening, commencing at 7.30 o'clock.

Poet's Corner.

A Sister Of Mercy.

See her in her modest beauty
Clad in simple robe of gray;
From the sacred path of duty,
Smiling all the clouds away.
Watch the children run to meet her
With their little joys and woes;
Rich and poor with blessings greet her;
Love is born where'er she goes.

Tenderest grief her glance expresses,
Where the wronged and suffering weep;
And beneath her kind caresses
Woe and pain are lulled to sleep.
All who drink the cup of sorrow
Love to feel her hovering near,
For the saddest hearts must borrow
Comfort from her words of cheer.'

Bluer seem the skies above her,
Round her breathes such heavenly grace
That we cannot choose but love her.
On her bright expressive face
Plays a smile all meek and tender,
Borrowed from a world divine;
And her eyes' angelic splendor
Must the coarsest souls refine.

When above the faint and dying
Full of pity bending low,
They upon her care relying
Feel a balm for every woe.
Where disease is rife, she lingers,
Frail of form, yet strong and brave,
Clasping close the stiffening fingers,
Kindling hopes beyond the grave.

All her holiest words are spoken
To the ear of guilt and shame,
So that spirits bent and broken
Must in reverence hold her name.
Sinners hear her gentle warning,
And with loving words are led
Through Redemption's radiant morning
To that path where angels tread.

Flowers of Hope, this gracious maiden
Showers upon the " vale of tears;"
With Heaven's choicest blessings laden,
To the sorrowing she appears.
Praise her, bless her all creation,
For her unassuming worth
Crowns her queen of every nation,
Crowns her queen of all the earth.

Humorous,

EPITAPH ON A KITTEN.

Here lies, by death smitten,
A poor hapless kitten
To moulder away into dust:
O had it lived longer,
It would have been stronger,
And died somewhat older, we trust!

Had it grown up to cathood,
Then many a rat would
Have mourned in the deepest of woe;
Let the curtain be drawn to,
For we hope it has gone to
The land where other cats go!

The mugwump roosts in the hollow log
The sagwag sits in the tree;
Whenever I hear the hogwig sing
My heart is sad in me.

Whenever the snagpop toots his too.
To the wail of the migwap hen,
And the migfunk chirps in the stilly night,
You bet I'm lonely then.

Our domestic we called Mary Ann,
She came from the county cavan;
But to lessen her toil,
Lit the fire with the oil:
Now we miss her, and also the can.

PHILOSOPHY.

Our fondest hopes are oft destroyed.
But why in tears bewail our plight?
The trouble that one can't avoid
A world of grieving won't set right.
Then do not walk the floor in woe
Because a note is overdue,
But let the man walk whom you owe—
He'll do enough of it for two.

THE BOARDER'S MORNING SOLILOQUY.

How swift the hours of sleep glide by!
I hear the sparrows chinning.
The mackerel pedler's screeching cry
Proclaims that day's beginning.
Once more to dress I must begin,
The sun shines out in splendor,
And I hear the thud of the rolling pin
That makes the beefsteak tender.

Brain And Brawn In Boston,

For many years has Boston town
Been famous for her men of brains;
While culture's gained her great renown,
That she " knows beans" the fact remains

The " transcendental ego's" slow
To see that nature's ever kind,
And that some recent contests show
The pow'r of matter over mind.

Now Boston finds that brawn has charms,
To woo great brains from culture's sway,
For while they praise their slugger's arms
At Snowden's feet they tributes lay.

The Whichness of the What may vex.
The men of more than mortal ken,
The Nearness of the Now perplex
The minds that ponder o'er the Then.

But when it comes to deeds of might
Where arms and legs for fame contest,
To win a belt or medal bright,
Then Boston brawn leads all the rest.

Three cheers for culture, both of brain
And brawn, in bean-fed Boston town.
Our Athens is herself again—
By brain and brawn she wins renown.

A MOVE IN MASSACHUSETTS.—The dissatisfaction with that Massachusetts institution called the " New England Agricultural Society"—which has been increasing and outspoken during many years—has taken practical form at last in the proposition to start another association. The N. E. Farmer chronicles the matter in detail; and the N. E. Homestead refers to the movement against the " the Loring incubus," " empty pretender," in its leading article, from which we take one paragraph:

" The enterprising farmers and breeders of the Worcester Society and also from other sections of the State, long disgusted with the emptiness of the Loring-Needham combination, have waited patiently to see if it were possible to reform the hollow New-England Agricultural Society. When, however, it was so forcibly demonstrated at the late annual meeting of the New-England Society that its whole purpose was the self glorification and perpetuation in office of Dr. Loring, it was at once decided that the time had come for a new departure."

The hope is expressed that " all vitiating influences" will be excluded from the annual fairs of the new organization. Only by paying respect to the moral sentiment of rural New-England—which the old society seem to think it could safely ignore—can there be chance of removing, in the proposed way, " the last vestige of the depressing influence of the ring of self-seeking politicians who in former years fattened upon the agricultural interests of the State."—N. Y. Tribune.

The Depopulated Highlands.

There are few Highland glens that do not contain traces of the banished population. In Lochaber, along the shores of Loch Arkaig, the home of the clan Cameron, the remains of what were once extensive townships may yet be seen. The celebrated Glencoe formerly teemed with a hardy population. Famous Glengarry is a sheep walk, and the powerful clan Macdonnell are now in Canada. Round Fort Augustus and far into the country of the clan Fraser is naught but desolation. In hundreds of straths in Ross-shire the wild heather has not even yet obliterated the green pastures, and the cultivated fields that once belonged to the MacKenzies and Munroes, and from whence the different battalions of the gallant Ross-shire buffs marched to conquer at Maidra, at Seringapatam, at Assaye, and Argaum. So late as 1849, when the present prime minister had already obtained political eminence, Hugh Miller attempted, but fruitlessly, to draw the attention of the British public to the work of destruction that was going on. He eloquently proclaimed that "while the law is banishing its tens for terms of seven and fourteen years, the penalty of deep-dyed crimes, irresponsible and infatuated power is banishing its thousands for life for no crime whatever." A large number of the dispossessed tenantry were sent to America; the remainder settled on the seashore, where they were cramped into small holdings, and have since lived. The tourist steaming along the wild coast of the western Highlands and islands may see perched on every cliff, in the most exposed situations and subject to the fury of Atlantic gales, the wretched hamlets that now contain the remnants of the Highland clans. Probably he will wonder how a population can at all manage to exist under such conditions. But there they are, elbowed to the very verge of their country. For large tracts of that country the proprietors even now can show no scrap of document, their claim to possess resting solely on the fact that it has never been contested. Created and looked upon, like the foxes, as mere vermin that interfere with sport, discouraged and thwarted in every direction, these people, notwithstanding their poverty and the hardships of their lot, have maintained unimpaired the noblest attributes of their race. Crime of any kind is almost unknown among them. Their moral standard is the highest in Britain, contrasting in that respect most remarkably with their lowland neighbors; and not a few of the leading British statesmen, lawyers, divines, and soldiers of the past eighty years first saw the light in these crofters' huts. Far behind the strip of inhabited littoral stretch the Blue mountains, the snug and often fertile glens from whence the clans were banished, now turned into silent wilderness, inhabited only by sheep and deer and an occasional shepherd or keeper. There are the vast tracts, rented by the American, Mr. Winans, as a hunting ground, to be visited by that alien for two or three months, and abandoned to solitude for the remainder of the year, where not even a native of the soil may plant his foot.—The Nineteenth Century.

Romance of a French Diplomat.

A truly extraordinary story is told by an old schoolfellow of M. Lemaire, late French Consul General at Shanghai, and recently appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Hue. Twenty-five years ago he was at school at Tonnerre. There, with unconsciousness of his destiny, he was nicknamed Jaunot, on account of his singularly yellow complexion. He was a quiet lad, not brilliant, often bullied by his comrades, and somewhat hardly treated by his professors.

When fifteen he passed a vacation with an uncle in Burgundy, and had for companion a cousin much younger than himself. Their delight was to play at soldiers. Lemaire shouldered a rusty flint gun, and the cousin flourished an old sabre. One day it was agreed that they should get up some wine from the cellar, not with any pilfering intention, but merely to play at soldiers plundering. As the cousin was mounting the cellar stairs Lemaire exclaimed, "Here is the enemy," and pulled the trigger. The gun, which he did not know to be loaded, went off and blew out the brains of the young cousin. Lemaire's family, horrified at the event, sent him to sea as a cabin boy.

Nothing was heard of him for years, and he sent no letters home. At last it was found out that he had established himself at Saigon, had learned Chinese, and was employed as interpreter at the French Consulate. Later news came that he had married a Cochin Chinese lady, whether a native or a settler is not stated, and now the result of that unfortunate shot with the flint gun is that he is recognized as the most accomplished diplomatist that France can find to conduct her affairs among the yellow people. Such is the history of Jaunot.—London Daily News.

The Pronunciation of American Names.

Without commencing upon the Tagliafieros ('Tollivers') of Virginia, there are the Cecils (pronounced Sysls, or Syssls), the Champeneys (Chauneys), Rollestones (Rallstons), Leighs (Lees, Lays, and oftentimes Lyes), the Timberlakes (Timliks), the Ashuests (Ashetts), the Blounts (Blunts), the Eloarts (Allests), Auchtenbanches (Arbois), and the Kers (Kares). A family rejoiced in the name of Polly. The eldest son, an unkempt youth of 19, was called George Washington Polly. But the name was always written Pauline. Then the name Ralph was always Rafe, and the name Helena was accented on the first syllable—an English custom, but one not usual in the North.

In Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi, many other names occur, often of French, Spanish or Indian derivation, which assume a peculiar dialectal form. Beauchamp (pronounced Beechum), Daughty (Doty), Dockery (sometimes spelt Dackery—a contraction, it was said, of the French Du Cherie), Des Moulin (Demlin), Dupuy (Dupee), Pevensy (Pinsey), and many others which assume more or less variety in expression and pronunciation.—The Critic.

Diplomatic Secretary Fish.

Governor Hamilton Fish was noted for his deportment, and he took great pride in sending to the courts of Europe in a diplomatic capacity gentlemen whose dress and manners would not excite comment. He was much concerned, however, when it became his duty to commission Horace Maynard, of Tennessee, as Minister to Turkey, and Godlove S. Orth, of Indiana, as Minister to Austria. Neither one was remarkable for his observance the social proprieties, and it was some time before Governor Fish could devise to give them a lesson in dress. At last, so the story goes, an idea struck him, and sending for Orth he said something like this to the Indiana statesman:

"Mr. Orth, I have a favor to ask you."

"Anything I can do for you, Mr. Secretary, I'll be glad to."

"Thank you, Mr. Orth, thank you, sir, you are very good. Mr. Maynard, you know, is an excellent gentleman, but he is not accustomed to the ways of society as you or I are," and the Secretary smiled pleasantly at the guileless Orth, who had on a sky-blue necktie and unblackened boots. After having clinched his point he continued: "I am afraid he will invent some startling innovation on the costume usual among gentlemen when they are out in society. He may startle the foreign courts with a red necktie and a sack coat, and now what I want to ask you, Mr. Orth, is to give him a hint, as you are both going over on the same steamer, about what you or I should wear on social occasions—the dress coat, black trousers and waist coat, and the simple white tie. You will know precisely how to do it, and you will oblige me greatly by attending to the matter of so much importance, as you, as a member of polite society, know."

The hint was taken, and Mr. Orth was noted among the diplomatists at Vienna for his faultless attire. Mr. Maynard, with his long black hair and Indian features, was not so apt a scholar.—Ben: Perley Poore in Boston Budget.

A Dog's Offended Dignity.

An old setter once displayed such vanity that it was immediately seized upon to compel him to obedience. He would follow the members of the family whenever they went out, no matter how troublesome his presence might be. One day the children tied a ribbon-bow on the tip of the dog's tail. Everybody laughed at his comical appearance, which so mortified the poor setter that he retired under the sofa and sulked for an hour. The next day the family were going to a croquet party and the dog seemed bent on accompanying them. It occurred to one of the young ladies of the party to try the effect of a ribbon-bow. It was tied on his tail, and immediately he rushed into the house and hid under the sofa. When they returned he was on the doorsteps on his haunches as if concealing something, and refrained even from wagging his tail, lest the hated bow should be seen.—Youth's Companion.

An old gentleman who lives in this county, near McCormack's Church, taught two of our best young men a lesson the other night which they will be likely to remember. They had gone out to call on two young ladies at his house and remained quite late. At 11:20 the old gentleman awoke, and, thinking it was nearly 4 o'clock, his usual hour of getting up, mistaking the minute for the hour hand, he arose, and waking up the servants, breakfast was on the table at 12:20, instead of the usual hour, 4:30 a. m. The young men were called out of the parlor to breakfast at that solemn hour and felt considerably humiliated when the old gentleman told them that boys, in his younger days, used to go to bed before 4 o'clock next morning when they went on a courting expedition. Finding out his mistake in the hour he apologized in a becoming manner, and the young men returned to town determined on profiting by the night's experience.—Interior Journal.

When, two years ago, the compulsory educational law was passed by the French Legislature, the clause inserted in the bill respecting children who received elementary instruction in their own homes raised a good deal of protestation. In virtue of this clause parents whose children attended no school were to be examined annually, in order that it might be ascertained that they were not permitted to grow up without the instruction suitable to their years. Conservatives, and all who disapproved of the "laicization," of schools, declared the measure adopted, which is applicable to all classes of society, to the rich parents as well as to the workingman, to be arbitrary and intrusive, and heads of families were invited to refuse to comply with the law. For a time, however, it was not enforced, but now a circular just issued by the Prefect of the Seine fixes the date of the examination and the mode of procedure.

Lights Vitiating Air.

The air of a room lighted by gas is heated twenty times as much as if it were lighted to an equal extent by incandescent electric lamps. When arc-lamps are used the comparison is still more in favor of electricity. You will be surprised to know that our old friend the tallow candle, and even the wax candle, is far worse than gas in the proportion of air vitiated and the heat produced; and you will be disposed to disbelieve it. But the fact is, that so long as the candles were used light was so expensive that we were obliged to be content with little bits of it; in fact, we lived in a state of semi-darkness; and in this way we evaded the trouble. It is only since the general introduction of gas and petroleum that we have found what an evil it is.—Sanitary Engineer.

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils for throat, and frequently by both channel.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individual at different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of notable size, on which traces of blood may at times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant sniffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertions. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical or mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, loss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lighthill to decide on the first examination as to the cureability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of

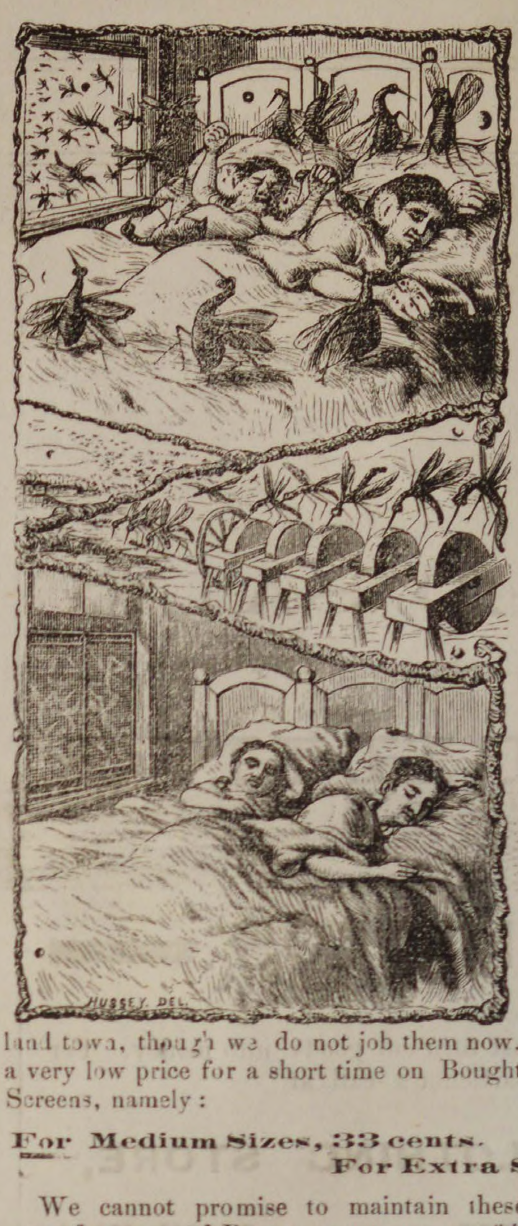
BOUGHTON'S HARD WOOD WINDOW SCREENS.

Read the Story.



The maker of the Boughton Window Screen is the great PHILADELPHIA MANUFACTURE of " PARQUET Floors." An idea of the magnitude of his business may be gained from the statement that he cuts and saws his hard wood timber in Virginia, from his own forests, and ships the lumber to his great factory in Philadelphia. The screens are made from the waste of wood floors, and costing nothing but for labor and wire, can be sold cheaper than a common soft wood screen. This Screen through a combination of circumstances, lost its foot-hold in New England last season. Knowing the merits of the screen we decided to bring it back, and accepted the agency for New England. After June 1st, when the jobbing season is virtually over, by sending out our men here and there we disposed of nearly 10,000 screens in a short time. Through our influence the screen is represented this season in every New England town, though we do not job them now. We have decided to make a very low price for a short time on Boughton's Hard Wood Window Screens, namely:

For Medium Sizes, 33 cents.
For Extra Sizes, 37 1-2 cents.

We cannot promise to maintain these prices for the season as the manufacturer and Boston agents are our friends, and they are afraid it will have an effect all over New England. We will however, sell 10 gross or 1440 screens at above prices.

THE SITUATION.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—It is pitiful to see men and women lying idle. It is pitiful to see them in great masses thrown out of employment. We wish they could be made to understand how hopeless the situation is, at least for half of them. The slowness with which business revives; the sudden closing of large mills, the operation on half time of other mills; the competition of railroads for frieght and passengers, and of our merchants and trades people for patronage, all point to the fact, that by slow and painful processes the national industry is to be re-adjusted. The waste of the late war, and the sudden removal from their usual pursuits of active and productive men, who ceased to be producers and became large consumers, gave an enormous stimulus to manufactures and to business. Consequently it was a great time for all gigantic manufacturing projects, and for all sorts of money-making projects. When the war ceased, it found the country, in its facilities for business adjusted,—not to a peace basis,—but upon a war basis. We had manufactures and trades all established upon the conditions of a most wasteful war.

The Government ceased to buy and to pay wages,and the question of panic, disaster, and universal stagnation became only a question of time. We have had the panic, the disaster, and the stagnation, and the country has looked in vain for a revival. We have had a measurably prosperous agricultural interest, which promises continuance, but trade and manufactures do not move. The almost incalculable amount of money invested in railroads, in mills, in business, lies unproductive; and it is becoming every day more evident that much of it must remain so. We have more railroads than we need, more mills than can be employed, more facilities for business and more men to do business than the country in a state of peace has use for.

There can be but one end to this—a great loss of capital and readjustment of the national industry. With this change there must come greater economy, and contentment with smaller profits. The scale of living must come down. Men who used to spend twenty thousand dollars a year must live on ten thousand; those that spent ten thousand must make themselves comfortable on five thousand, and so on to the lowest. The laboring men whose wages were so high during the war must stop striking, or they will get no work at all, simply because the paying of high wages is an impossibility. All the trade or labor unions in God's world, cannot compel men who have money to invest it in a business that pays nothing. Men that own mills will not run them at a loss. Let us have nothing to do with political doctors. They cannot help us by their schemes, except by giving us an honest financial system. Even this cannot work the miracle of making people consume more than they want, and of supplying work where it is not needed. Neither a sea of rags or a sea of gold can float a business that does not need to be done. We, of this generation, will hardly live to see the country genuinely prosperous. Great masses of property are to be abandoned. Hundreds of millions of invested funds will practically cease to exist. The things in which these funds have been invested cannot now be used, and they might just as well have been thrown into the fire. Tens, twenties, fifties will be counted out of the mills, the factories, the shops and sent either into idleness or into some other field of industry. In other words, our national industry must be readjusted. The American people are not lacking in shrewdness, patience, adaptativeness, and industry, and the good time will come, though it is likely to be long delayed.

G. W. M.

THE FAMOUS NOTRE DAME.—On the 30th of last January, the Sisters of the most noted Catholic seminary in the United States, the famous Notre Dame, at Govanstown, near Baltimore, Md., made public a card, certifying to the beneficial results attending the use of Red Star Cough Cure in that institution. They state that they found it efficacious alike for relieving coughs, oppressions on the chest and irritation of the throat. Officials of the Boards of Health of Brooklyn, Baltimore and other cities have likewise publicly proclaimed the virtues of this new discovery, which is entirely free from opiates, poisons and other objections.

We are in favor of a rigid enforcement of the liquor law of this state as it is now on the statutes. In the present state of medical science and the arts it is often necessary to use alcoholic liquors and they should be obtainable in a village large enough to support a drug store. We think the selectmen who refuse to give a respectable druggist a license on moral grounds are either fanatics or hypocrites, usually hypocrites.—Sharon Advocate.

"I have no appetite," complains many sufferers. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives an appetite and enables the stomach to perform its duty.

WHY THE YOUNG HUSBAND "DOESN'T LOVE BABY A BIT."—Why do all the water-eyed, shaky-kneed young wives appeal to you for sympathy when they have rocked their first seraph to sleep in a cut-teeth Mother Hubbard (only meant for babies), and why do they all, as a class, wipe the corner of their off eye with a new ten cent pink bordered mouchoir and plaintively tell you that "Dick has changed so since marriage," and that he doesn't love baby one bit? The real fact of the matter is that young girls lop down after having caught a man, tired from the effort, and they spend two-thirds of the year with "mar," who points out frailties in Dick's constitution much too often to suit Dick. He loved a jolly, cleanly girl, but he did not bargain for a weary, pale, slip-shod wife, who never crimps her hair for him any more, nor wears pretty house dresses or clean collars unless company comes. He expected that some time he should have to do the right thing by an heir, but again he did not bargain for a damp, sickly, bottle-reared, poor, almshouse style of baby, who moans his days away and howls out the nights. A jolly mother brings up jolly babies—you may be sure of that—and vice versa. Dick's smoking den is full of slop water and baby garments in the process of drying. Smoking hurts Alice and young Dick, so her mother says. His old bright-eyed, red-cheeked girl has grown into a down-at-the-heel, quiet non-reading, non-talking woman, full of complaints and neuralgia, with only a thin crust over her tears, and to cap all she is jealous because he can still laugh and admire a pretty woman neatly dressed. If young wives only knew it, the only way to keep a husband is to practice all the arts they used so cleverly to win him. No woman expects to change so, but they make the grave mistake of fancying that maternity will also rouse some hidden paternity, and that the father will grow solemn and teary with the mother. Not a bit of it. The baby adds another chap to romp with, and if he isn't that kind of a little animal he is voted "N. G.," until he is old enough to know dada and to know a papier mache pistol from a doll.—St. Louis Republican.

Barnum, Bailey & Hutchinson's grand aggregation has been widely advertised and wall-papered throughout the country, and it is expected that on Tuesday, June 23, when it will spread its mammoth tents, thousands of people from far and near will witness the performances. The show has three distinct and separate rings, and a huge elevated stage, upon which are given 100 acts at every performance by nearly three hundred actors culled from the highest walks of the profession. Sensation succeeds sensation until the breath of the auditor is almost taken away with delight. The double menagerie embraces a herd of elephants, exclusive of that curious Sacred White Elephant, bought from King Theeban for $200,000 and which comes, surrounded with the images, bronzes, fans, Burmese priests, Nautch dancing girls, Burmese musicians, idols, and everything it formerly had while in the king's chief city of Mandalay. The hippodrome races are thrillingly bewildering, and are contested in earnest for cash prizes by the riders, drivers and runners. There will be a procession through the principal streets of the city early in the forenoon, when the full strength and resources of the combined establishments will be unfolded.

BURDETTE PHILOSOPHY.— "One hundred doses for a dollar," is the way a patent medicine heads its "add." Man takes a dollar's worth. Then the undertaker comes along and it costs the man one hundred dollars for one dose. Thus we see all things come around even in this old world, after all. When wheat is cheap flour is high, and when you can buy a whole stall-fed ox for four cents a pound, beefsteak keeps right up to nineteen cents, with a close flavor of the horns at that. When the telephone company chops two holes through the roof of your house for nothing, it makes up for it by charging you fifty cents for telling the coal man to bring you twelve tons of hard coal, when you only tried to order three quarts of ice cream from the confectioner's. Oh, it's all right. At least it is "is," and whatever is, is right.—R. J. Burdette.

THAT DIRTY DANDRUFF.—Dandruff is dirty and disagreeable in every way. It soils the clothing continually, and is accompanied by a hardly less annoying sensation of itching. The scalp is diseased. There is nothing in the world so thoroughly adapted to this trouble as Parker's Hair Balsam. It cleanses and heals the scalp, stops the falling hair and restores its original softness, gloss and color. Is not oily, highly perfumed, an elegant dressing. Very economical, as only a small occasional application keeps the hair in perfect condition.

The distinguished U. S. Senator from Indianna. Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, certifies that in a case of rheumatism in the back, he obtained instantaneous relief from St. Jacobs Oil. He says it is a remarkable remedy.

It is suggested that the mucilage on two cent postage stamps be flavored with lemon and that on the ones with vanilla, as a needed reform in the department and a means of increasing sales. This opens a new field for the postage stamp, which, if properly gotten up, might prove a good substitute for chewing gum, and if a demand could be created for postage stamps as such an article of diet, the department need have no more anxiety about deficiency in receipts. A little paregoric in the mucilage might make the postage stamp a good thing to have in the house, and essence of peppermint and Jamaica ginger stamps would be handy to travel with. It is surprising that the post-office department does not make the most of its opportunities.—Milford Gazette.

Editors and Publishers.

THE SCENES in the Massachusetts House of Representatives, last week, previous to the passage of the Metropolitan police bill, need a word of comment. Nothing like it has been seen there for years. For three days the opponents of the bill impeded all legislation and attempted by fillibustering to prevent its passage. At every stage of its progress through the Legislature there had been a full, fair and free discussion on the merits of the bill. The best speakers on both sides had been heard. Every vote that was taken showed an increased majority in favor of its passage. Argument had been exhausted. Both houses were in favor of the passage of the bill by about a two-thirds vote. The minority then resorted to fillibustering, and by this very method showed how desperate was their opposition and how weak was their case.

We regret to say that the purport of the bill is greatly misunderstood. Many people have the idea—and this is encouraged by the opponents of the bill—that the bill is similar to that which created the old State police of years ago. Nothing can be further from the truth. The police force of the city of Boston is under the control of three police commissioners. The bill under discussion provides that these three gentlemen shall be appointed by His Excellency the Governor, instead of by the Mayor of the city of Boston. That is all.

At first appearance this would seem a small matter. But a moment's consideration shows where the opposition is. The city of Boston is in control of a power,—we do not say party—who do not wish the laws with reference to intoxicating liquors, or gambling saloons, or disreputable houses, to be enforced. On that power the police of Boston, including the commissioners, are dependent for their appointments, which, of course, means their bread and butter. It requires no argument to prove that a stream will rise no higher than its fountain. Without any reflection on the personnell of the police force, if the power in control desire certain violations of the law winked at, it can easily be done.

No candid person, at all familiar with Boston, can deny that the law in these three cases we have mentioned is constantly being violated. The Law and Order League, through Mr. Dudley, its efficient secretary, have shown that the police dare not enforce the liquor law. The Boston Evening Record has shown the same thing with reference to gambling dens and disreputable houses. No sane man can suppose for a moment that the police are ignorant of these violations of the law. The captains of each police precinct, including most of the force, know every gambling saloon, every house of ill fame, every unlicensed and licensed liquor saloon on their beat. If any disinterested person doubts this, let him ask the first police officer he meets. More than this they know that the law is being violated. They know too that its strict enforcement by them will only be carried on at the price, either of a transfer to some other portion of the city, or their discharge from the force.

These things were shown clearly by the friends of the metropolitan police bill, and particularly by Mr. Coffin in his able speech in the House at the first stage of the bill. We do not expect, the friends of the bill cannot hope for a strict enforcement of the law. But the removal of the power in control of the police commissioners cannot fail to bring about an improvement. That the violators of the law know this is shown by the tactics of last week.

Our own town furnishes an example of what can be effected by a transfer of power. Under the same chief of police and nearly the same force, we have had a non-enforcement of the liquor law and such an enforcement as has never before been known in this town. In the latter case the result has been brought about by a moral power which is upholding the police in the performance of their duty. A similar result will obtain in the city of Boston.

The weakest thing the opponents of the bill have done is to denounce the passage of the bill as an outrage—and a subversion of the liberty of the people. It will be a subversion of the rights of the people, and the death of a republican form of government, when the minority of a Legislative body are allowed to rule, or when by high handed proceedings they can either defeat the will of the majority or impede legislation. The essence of this government is the rule of the people by the people. And who are the people but their accredited representatives in the Legislature?

It is also claimed that it takes away the local power from the city of Boston. That is true. But the necessity exists. This has been plainly shown. It should also be defended by every friend of law and order without reference to party. It was ably shown that large numbers of people, business men of Boston, are in favor of the bill who are non-residents. Their capital is in the city in their business. Their residences are elsewhere. The present non-enforcement of the law troubles them. Lawlessness means the destruction of property. There is no other course but an appeal to the State—and no tenable denial can be made of the power of the State to act in such a case.

The passage of the bill is a triumph for the friends of law and order, and in a certain sense of the Boston Law and Order League. It becomes them to see that good results shall follow—that the laws shall be better enforced. The motto of the League, "We ask only obedience to law," is a good one for any State. Its disregard can only result in anarchy.

The new time table of the Boston, Lynn and Revere Beach R. R. has gone into effect. Half hour trains will run nearly all the afternoon to the beaches from Lynn; and early morning express trains to Boston, returning in the evening will be a new feature. They will run to East Boston in 16 minutes. It is a pleasant trip to Boston via the Lynn Horse R. R. which connects with the Revere Beach R. R. at every trip. The new cars ordered a while since have arrived. These cars are the best the road have ever built, and were designed to especially accommodate that class of patrons who find their comfort, going to and from their places of business, in the "smoker." Their seating capacity is fifty-two, and they are the most elegant cars ever placed upon the road. The new locomotive ordered for this road will arrive in a day or two. Everything is in readiness for the large summer business which the road is sure to have.

We learn there has been a new partnership formed in Salem to cater to the wants of the theatre going public. The present local managers have combined under the firm name of Andrews, Moulton & Johnson, and besides the local business in Salem they will put on the road an opera company. Mr. Johnson will travel with this company and the local business will be run by Mr. Andrews. This combination now controls all the bill boards of the city, and it is their intention to give the public all the first class attractions on the road.

The Essex Club elected the following officers, at its annual meeting on Saturday: President, E. H. Haskell, of Gloucester; Vice President, W H. Moody, of Haverhill; Secretary and Treasurer, Benj. Pitman, of Marblehead; Executive Committee, Messrs. Hale, of Newburyport, Frisbee, of North Andover, Truell, of Lawrence, Allen, of Lynn, Watson, of Beverly, Mudge of Danvers, Proctor of Peabody, Pike, of Merrimac, Babson, of Gloucester and Breed of Salem.

The Beverly Citizen under the management of Mr. Irvin W. Allen, is one of the best papers in the county. This marked change for the better from its former management is appreciated by the citizens of that town who testify to it by largely increasing the subscription list. It is in every sense a live local paper and a credit to the enterprising town in which it is published.

The music which has been such a popular feature on the steamers of the Fall River Line in seasons past, will be resumed on Monday next. Hooper's famous "Steamer Pilgrim Band and Orchestra" will be attached to that vessel and Hall's celebrated Band and Orchestra to steamer Bristol.

Henry P. Ives, at the old corner book store, has among other fine views, that of the birth-place of Nathaniel Hawthorne.

BALTIMORE.

Leaving Norfolk on the evening boat we pass out through Hampton Roads and can but recall the exciting scenes of 1862 and the battle between the two iron monsters that was fought here. On the shores are large forests of the clean, straight southern pine or canebreak growing in profusion on the low grounds. The weather, which was warm and pleasant when we left, suddenly changes, and black clouds roll up from the shore, and while the twilight gradually disappears the moon comes out and sends its silvery lines across the bay, quite in contrast to the dark clouds on shore which are illumined every few moments with the lightening's flash. Nearer and nearer comes the storm and in a short time the sky is overcast and the rain descending compels us to adjourn to the cabin where we were instructed in the mystery of a new game at cards. Early the next morning all were on deck and on every side were hundreds of sailing vessels of all descriptions, starting out for their day's duties. We pass Fort Carroll and from there till we reach Fort McHenry, just below the city of Baltimore, the shore is lined on either side with fertilizer works, grain elevators, coal pockets, lumber yards, etc. Baltimore is a city of brick buildings, no wooden structures are allowed to be built within the city limits. Brick with marble trimmings are the most numerous. The bricks are painted a deep red and marked off with white, while nearly every house has white marble steps, which if kept clean are quite attractive. There seems to be a lack of neatness about Baltimore. While it has many fine residences and public buildings there is a lack of neatness about them that would not be tolerated farther north. The grass on the lawns is not cut, the entrances are strewn with paper and dirt which a few minutes' work would remove, but they are left until a rain carries them off. This neglect is illustrated when we say that on entering the United States Court House, a fine stone building, the first thing we saw in the lower hallway was a lawn mower and a manure spreader, which looked as if they had found comfortable quarters there all winter. Like Norfolk, there is no underground sewerage at Baltimore, and there is a constant running brook on both sides of the street. This is kept cleaner than in Norfolk, as there is a fine supply of high service water and the city being built on a hill there is a natural flow toward the sea. One can hardly believe that in a city with such elegant residences where no comfort or luxury could be conceived that is not contained in those homes, that the only outlet for bathrooms, set basins and pantry accumulations, is in the public streets, or, as in some instances, into a cesspool in the yard that has no ventilation save what passes into the house through even the modern improvements in plumbing.

Notwithstanding what we have said the city is a beautiful one, and in every direction there are delightful drives and many places of interest, while her people are hospitable and point with pride to their city's many attractive parks, public buildings, etc. They even like to point out Federal Hill, where Gen. Butler stood upon the grass-covered ramparts and overlooked the city more than twenty years ago. Strange enough Gen. Butler was the first Massachusetts man we met after leaving home. He was arguing a case before Judges Bond & Morris in the U. S. Court. He wore his accustomed suit of broadcloth, adorned with a pretty pink rosebud and spoke with his usual vigor and animation.

CONVEYANCES.

There are conveyances of all kinds in Baltimore and there are stands of hackmen with easy riding barouches, who make it their business to drive visitors about the city and point out to them the different places of interest. They are well posted and the information they furnish is usually reliable. In seeing the city in this way, one passes over a section that is not reached by the horsecars, and the driver is particular to select a route across the beautiful railroad bridges, which are marvels of architecture and engineering skill. Along by the monuments, the beauty of which, rather than the number, has given the city the name of "Monumental City." Stopping at the Catholic Cathedral, which was commenced in 1806 and finished in 1821, many biblical paintings of great value adorn the walls. Toward the northern part of the city is Greenmount Cemetery, which contains, among others, the bones of those distinguished Odd Fellows, Wildey and Ridgely. The grounds are richly laid out, and embellished in the most tasteful and appropriate manner. And so the stranger can drive from one object of interest to another, and spend several days in seeing the sights of the city. Most of the parks are reached by horse cars, as well as the wharves and principal streets of the city. The cars run here are of many different styles, some are bobtails and some are bobtails with a bow window behind, and the entrance on one side with seats running round to the door. The conductors wear no uniforms and improvise a set for their own convenience, consisting of an old box with a piece of carpeting; many of the conductors are foreigners. The owners of these cars offer every inducement for merchants to advertise in them, and every place where a card can be stuck up is utilized. The outside is built all over with miniature billboards advertising a patent medicine, a theatre or a bar room. They name their horse cars in honor of prominent men and all are doomed to this peculiar immortality, whether they like it or not. There was one car that naturally took our fancy, it was named "George Peabody." Well, it was a libel on George. It had seen its best days, and where it had collided with heavy express teams and come out second best with a hole in its side, it was covered with a tin sign advertising one of the daily papers, while all over it were hanging placards, etc., giving it the appearance of a burlesque in an antique and horrible parade.

DRUID HILL PARK.

Among the many beautiful parks of which the city boasts, and by far the finest and one of the grandest in the country is Druid Hill Park. It is within half a mile of the city limits and comprises some 900 acres. It was laid out over a hundred years ago in the style of the English parks and was purchased of the Roger's family for $500,000, having been in their possession for a century and a half. In the center of the estate is the old Mansion House, with broad piazzas, and stretching in every direction are broad avenues and masses of trees which have been so skillfully arranged as to lead the eye at every turn through a succession of ever changing views. And here among this primeval forest one can but contrast between the works of God and the works of man. There are broad open fields for picnic parties, natural ponds with tiny boats for the children, shaded lanes leading to the quarters of the animals, which are kept in the rear of the mansion house. Under fragrant scented tulips and beautiful shading Lombardy poplar trees are seats for the comfort and convenience of the public, where one can rest and listen to the warbling of beautiful birds that abound in great numbers. There are winding drives and bubbling springs. In one direction is a natural elevation in the other a low plain, and in every direction summer houses, rustic bridges, natural and artificial ponds and great forest trees. It is like Central Park in New York, the fashionable drive of the city and hundreds of turnouts of all descriptions can be seen there daily. The Park is free to all and under wise and careful police regulation.

THE CITY HALL.

The city hall is built of Marble and iron and is a very imposing looking building surmounted by a large dome from which every part of Baltimore can be seen. The plans were drawn in 1866 and the city appropriated $2,500,000 for the work, which was put in the hands of commissioners, consisting of several business men of the city, who served without pay and who gave a generous share of their time to superintending its construction and strange to say after all was completed, including the furnishing and everything, they turned over to the city a balance of $229,000, coming inside their appropriation that amount. They justly claim the honor of having the first, and perhaps the only public building built inside an appropriation. The city government consists of a mayor, twenty councilmen and ten aldermen, they are elected for two years each and represent two wards. The rooms occupied by them are forty-two feet square. They are furnished in the most elaborate manner in hard wood with corinthian pilasters, crowned by rich gilt caps, while the ceilings are elegantly decorated, and the walls are hung with life size oil portraits of distinguished men of the city. These rooms are furnished more elaborately and expensively than those occupied by the congress of the United States at Washington. The entrance door is of bronze and the building itself is one of the finest in the country.

THE PEABODY INSTITUTE.

This monument of the generosity and princely munificence of him, whom our town as well as other towns and even nations like to honor, is a fine building built of brick and marble, is situated opposite the Washington Monument and is 145 feet in length and 71 feet in width. It contains a large and convenient hall with a seating capacity of 1400. The library contains 75,000 rare and valuable works, including art, science, antiquities, history, religion, law, poetry, etc. All these books are for reference only and cannot be taken from the room. The art galleries, besides the paintings, contain many valuable pieces of sculpture and statuary, among the latter being Rinehart's statute of "Clytie" which is much admired by the visitors at the Corcoran Art Gallery at Washington, where there is a fac-simile. In 1857 Mr. Peabody presented the sum of $1,240,000 for the establishing and maintaining this library, and the building cost $132,000 independent of the ground. The people of Baltimore do not seem to appreciate this library, and its use is confined almost exclusively to students and ministers. There is a lot of old fossil and red tape about its management that the public don't like. A person in position to know said there were more people from out of town visited it in a year than there were residents in two years.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER COMPANY.

The visit of a newspaper man to Baltimore would not be complete without a call on this celebrated house, made so by the liberal use of printers' ink and the merit of the goods offered the public. St. Jacobs Oil is familiar to every household, not only in this country but every country inhabited by civilized man, and perhaps a few words about the way this business is conducted will interest the reader. The building is of brick, stone and ornamental iron work, is five stories high and runs back one hundred and seventy-five feet. On entering the vestibule are a suit of offices elegantly furnished, comprising the cashier's and book keeper's department, the general business office, and a retiring or reception room for private consultations. There is also the private office of the executive partner of the firm, Mr. Christian Devries. Opening a door we step into the mailing department, which occupies a space of 5000 square feet. From here is sent the pamphlets, calendars, almanacs, posters, etc., printed in a score of different languages to all parts of the world. Leading from this room are offices including the Private Stenographer, the supply office, the mailing lists and the foreign department. The correspondents material of the house is kept here and equals that of a large stationery store. Next we enter the printing office, which is one of the largest in the state, and twelve Hoe cylinder presses are engaged in printing almanacs for '86. There are also a score of small job presses and the office is supplied with a large amount of material. Two eighty horse power boilers and a fifty horse power engine supply the motive power. From the printing office is the shipping department, where are all the stencils and marking utensils. Here are great books giving the names of druggists in the vast territory covered by the sales of this firm. The second floor of a rear building contains the bindery with folding machines, stitching machines, cutters and drills. A corps of ten girls are constantly employed in putting in the suspension strings. About half a million copies a week are completed. There is a show card and box factory adjoining, and the show cards are framed by machinery. The visitor next enters the advertising department which is the most extensive and ingeniously contrived department of newspaper advertising in this or any other country. All the vast correspondence comes to this office and a large force is employed. At least 10,000 different newspapers are received here and a twenty or more young ladies are kept constantly employed looking them over and seeing that the firms advertising is inserted according to contract. The papers are then filed in order of the States from which they come, in large file cases marked off in pigeon holes. A year's file of the weekly papers are kept here and a less number of the dailies, but all papers are kept for one year. To such a system have they got their work that they know when every bill is due, and they promptly remit before a bill is sent, although they spend $40,000 a year for newspaper advertising. To make this more clear we will say that for the past four years we have advertised this firm and have never yet presented them with a bill, although we collect quarterly. A few days before the quarter expires there is always a check for us.

The laboratory and factory, from which very properly the public are excluded, occupy the upper floor of both buildings. Here are several automatic filling machines, each one of which fills 12,000 bottles per day. They give employment to some three hundred and fifty persons. The firm consists of Christian Devries, Minnie A. Vogeler and Herman D. Umbstaetter. Besides St. Jacobs Oil they manufacture the Red Star Cough Cure and several German Remedies.

Ladies in search of bargains in any kind of goods will be benefited by reading Peabody's advertisement. The nun's veiling at 10 cents is truly wonderful, for it is worth 25 cents anywhere. The four cent lawns are beauties, and the eight cent ginghams the best in the market. Bathing towels for 9 cents each is another bargain at this counter. The hat counter speaks well for the popularity of his millinery department. In parasols we noticed a big display, covering one counter, making a very attractive appearance. The buttons and trimmings, the laces and Hamburgs, the corsets and skirts, and the dozen other departments, all seemed to be attracting customers.

J. M. Ward, the florist, on Endicott street, advertises in another column a fine line of Asters. These are the German variety, pure white and different colors, and are large and thrifty. An endless variety of flowers can be found by a visit to his greenhouse. He is making a specialty of double geraniums just now, many varieties of which he has imported himself. They are in all colors, one especially unique is an ivy leaf geranium, the leaf of which looks like the rubber plant. He has an asparagus plant called temerissimus which is very delicate and will climb like smylax. The beautiful beds of large pansies have been reduced by constant sales, but there are many fine plants left. Call and see the beautiful plants now in bloom at his greenhouse.

Mr. M. S. Clark, has the contract for building the parsonage for the Baptist society, at a cost of $3000. The house will be 29x36 feet 2 1-2 stories high with pitch roof and an L. 6x17 feet in the rear. On the first floor will be kitchen, dining-room, sitting room and parlor. A piazza will extend along the side of the house facing Park street. A commodious hallway, with stairs leading to the second story will also occupy a place in the front of the house. The second floor will have four sleeping rooms, bath room, and small room over the hallway to be used as a study. The attic will not be finished at present. A bay window and portico will be built on the Summer street side of the house.

Last Saturday afternoon the three boys Patrick Walsh, Timothy Lane and Martin Tierney, charged with breaking into Chas. H. Goulding's furniture store, were before Judge Merrill by continuance, and State Agent Hull was also present. The Lane and Tierney boys were sent to the Lyman School for boys at Westboro, and the State Board of Health, Lunacy and Charity will look after Walsh. Thomas and Samuel Danahey and Cornelius Shehan for breaking glass at the house of William Bushby were fined $2 each.

Next Sunday, June 21st, will be set apart as "Children's Day," at the Methodist church. In the afternoon at the usual hour of service, the Sunday School will be addressed by Rev. V. A. Cooper of Lynn, whose unique address one year ago, so deeply interested both School and congregation. In the evening there will be a Sunday school concert in which the children will build a "Lighthouse" for the world, to commence at 7 1-4 o'clock. All invited.

John F. Moore, of Ossipee, N. H., at one time Chief of Police at Peabody, and later a resident of Woburn, was arrested by the Woburn Police, for selling mortgaged property, but escaped from his keeper on East street, in that town, last week, and got away. Chief Nelson received a telephone message from him in the evening at Boston, saying he would come and pay all damages and make things lively all around. He is bordering on the tough says the Woburn Journal.

The public exhibition of writing and drawing by the pupils of the public school, opened at the School Committee room this afternoon. The drawings and manuscript were arranged around the room, and the former embraced all conceivable designs and showed a proficiency creditable to the scholars, while the latter shows that every attention is paid to penmanship in our schools. The judges have marked the papers. Those with numbers 1, 2 and 3 upon them in blue are considered by the judge to be of the first grade in order of merit. Those with the word "excellent" are of the 2d grade and those on the table are third grade. The exhibition will be continued to-morrow afternoon. Public invited.

Capt. W. F. Wiley has taken possession of the house recently purchased from C. D. Howard on Lowell street and has greatly improved the place by regrading and widening the driveway and building a face wall between his house and the open lot on the east side. New steps have been put in on the front side and the wall relaid. He is also building a large carriage house adjoining the barn and making numerous other improvements. When completed he will have one of the most attractive places on the street.

Dublin contributed a case to the police court yesterday morning when Honora Connell was arranged, charged with exercising her muscle and firing off her jaw at Ellen Kelley and her two children, which made a general family row of it. Where the old man was doesn't appear. This charge was met by a counter charge saying that Ellen Kelley assaulted Honora Connell, and so the wise Judge decided to call it a mutual assault and fined both ladies $5.00 and costs each.

The new Danvers and Peabody railroad track has been laid on Andover street, on the right hand side of the street, and directly over the water main, in one place passing over the six-inch gate. Looks as if this would make considerable trouble in case of a break, if water had to be shut off for any purpose.

A Wicked Joke.

'I wonder what is the trouble between Puffer and Gambol and Sloan? They hate him like poison,' remarked the Judge.

'Haven't you heard?' inquired the Major

'No; what is it?'

'You know what a terrible hand Puffer writes? Some one told him once that he wrote a distingue hand, and it set him up so that he now writes worse than ever. Well, that happens to be his sensitive point. He prides himself on it. Gambol has a weak point, too—his eyes. He can't help being cross-eyed, but it worries him all the same. When he goes to the theatre, he sits with his back to the stage to see the performance. He is a first-rate fellow, though. About a month ago, Gambol asked Sloan to introduce him to Puffer. Now, Sloan can't help playing a practical joke any more than he can live without eating. 'I'll arrange that for tomorrow,' answered Sloan, 'but you had better take a pad of paper and a pencil along with you. He is as deaf as a post, poor fellow. He is terribly sensitive about it, too. So when you meet him just act as if you knew all about it. I'll see you at his office at noon tomorrow.'

'A few minutes later Sloan was seated in the editorial rooms of the Leader.

''I want to bring a friend up here to meet you tomorrow,' he remarked to Puffer.

''Glad to meet any friend of yours,' responded the editor.

''He is a friend of yours, too,' replied Sloan. 'He greatly admires your editorials. There is one peculiarity about him, though.'

'What's that?'

''He's deaf as a clam. He can't hear it thunder. He doesn't know it's raining until he misses his umbrella. He is very touchy on that point, and you had better have some paper and a pencil ready for him when he comes, and act as if you always knew he was deaf. It will make him feel easier.'

'The next day at noon Sloan and his visitor entered the Leader office. Puffer was waiting for them. Sloan took their cards, and gave Puffer's to Gambol, and vice versa. Both men smiled at each other encouragingly, and producing pads of paper big enough to write a President's message on, sat down beside the editorial desk.

''I am glad to meet you,' wrote Puffer on his pad.

'Gambol took the scrawl and looked at it, first out of one eye and then out of the other. A puzzled look came over his face. Finally he turned the paper upside down, and a light of intelligence broke upon his countenance. Taking up his pencil, he wrote:

''I am exceedingly sorry to hear it. Did you ever try Simpson's Extract?' and handed it back to Puffer.

'When Puffer read this, his mouth opened with astonishment. He took his pencil and wrote on the bottom of the sheet:

''I don't want any extract. I am not sick. I simply said I was pleased to meet you.'

'Then he shoved the paper over to Gambol, and waited for a reply. If Gambol was puzzled at the first communication, he was in reality stricken dumb at the second. He glanced appealingly at Sloan, who was at that moment attentively looking at a picture on the wall, with his handkerchief in his mouth to smother his laughter. Finally he struck what seemed to him to be a clue, and he wrote in reply:

''Yes, thanks, don't care if I do; but don't you think we had better go to lunch first?'

'Then he handed back the roll to the editor, and smiled a smile of mingled self-satisfaction and relief.

'When Puffer saw the answer his disgust rose beyond his control. He rose up in his chair, took the paper and handed it to Sloan.

''See here, Sloan!' he shouted; 'see what this grandson of a lunatic has written. This cross-eyed fool evidently doesn't understand his own language. What in Tophet did you want to bring such a strabismic ass up to this office to meet me for? Here, take this paper and write to him that I am sick today, or dead, or anything, and don't want to write any more; and the next time you bring a deaf and dumb idiot up here to see me, just let me know, and I'll run out of town for a week or so.'

''That's all right!' yelled Gambol, as he danced around the table; that's all right; but if I wrote a hand like yours I'd print my communications and letters. I'd spell them out on my fingers. I'd hire a school-boy to write for me. I'd—'

''Say,' gasped Puffer, 'ain't you deaf?'

'No,' replied Gambol; 'ain't you?

'Then both men looked at each other a minute and simultaneously exclaimed: 'Where's Sloan?'

'But Sloan was a wise man. He was gone.'—Puck.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY CURES A TERRIBLE CASE OF GRAVEL WHEN OTHER HELP FAILED.

What is Gravel? what causes it, and who are most liable to it? It is frequently attended with acute pain, and unless relief can be found, produces inflammation and death. Both sexes and all ages are liable to it, although men who have reached or passed middle age are its most common victims. Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable medicine for Gravel, as the disease seems on the increase, and we are glad to say that such a specific is now before the public in the form of DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter, selected from many similar communications:

PITTSFIELD, MASS., March, 1884.

Dr David Kennedy.

Dear Sir:—You have a right to know, and I desire the public to know my experience with Gravel and my remarkable recovery through the use of your "FAVORITE REMEDY." I am a carpenter living in this place, and there are plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of Gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away, and I had little more trouble until last July, 1883. One day when at work in my shop I was suddenly seized with a keen and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said: "I can do nothing for you. Your case is incurable!" I was frightened and went to the second, who said little, but gave me a prescription. It did no good.

Then began a series of experiences the agony and horror of which words cannot depict. Think of it! I was sometimes taken in the street, and would fall, writhing with agony, upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven, I then heard of "KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY," through Mr. P. P. Cooley. I had not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was nearly one-half an inch long. I persevered with the medicine, the symptoms gradually abated, and I have had no more trouble since. I am well, thanks to you and "FAVORITE REMEDY." Yours most gratefully,

JAMES D. KENNEDY.

What "FAVORITE REMEDY" did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to do so Address—Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

FAVORITE REMEDY

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5, by all druggists.

Book Notices.

Those of our readers who will visit the White Mountains and their vicinity this summer, will do well to consult the little guide book of the Boston & Lowell R. R. It is published under the supervision of Lucius Tuttle, Esq., new General Passenger Agent, and like every thing over which he has control, is first class in every respect. It not only gives maps and time tables, but descriptions in details of the many beautiful places on the route of the road—information of value and interest to the tourist. The illustrations of scenery and the leading hotels are from entirely new plates, and there is nothing that the Summer saunterer desires to know that is not found in the book. Excursion routes are made up and prices are given—the names of all the hotels reached by the Boston & Lowell R. R. are given with the prices charged for board, and in addition to this the address is given of the numerous boarding houses for the accommodation of those who cannot afford the luxury of the higher priced hostelry. The book contains nearly 200 pages, is a model of typographical neatness, the covers being of a most artistic design and should be in the hands of every tourist. It will be sent by mail to any of our readers who will enclose 6 cents in stamps to Lucius Tuttle, B. & L. R. R., Boston. Send for it.

BUSINESS TACT AND OPPORTUNITY.—A streak of pure good luck in business or the sudden achievement of success and wealth by a happy hit is rare, but there are many lucky and prosperous folks who are so because they watch their opportunities and make the best of them. Mr. Koehler of Rochester, N. Y., tried his hand at canvassing for "Plain Home Talk" and made four dollars in the first two hours. Mr. Sandford of Maine, took 43 orders from 47 persons to whom he showed the book. Mr. Taylor, in Cleveland, took 19 orders in one day. Why do smart, capable men complain of hard times and "nothing to do" when equal opportunities are open to them? They have only to call for circulars, prospectus and terms of the Murray Hill Publishing Co., 129 East 28th St., New York City.

FRIDAY A LUCKY DAY.—When anything distressing occurs on Monday, or Thursday, or Sunday, no account is made of its happenings on that particular day. Let the mishap occur on Friday, and behold the head-waggers! "There may be nothing in it," they croak; "It may be all a weak superstition, but Friday is an unlucky Day; there is no denying it." Of the great blessings and happy events that fall on Friday they take no note. American old women, sailors, and other superstitious-ridden folk do not remember that on Friday Columbus sailed on his voyage of discovery; that on Friday ten weeks after, he discovered America; that on Friday the Mayflower with the Pilgrims, arrived at Plymouth; and on Friday they signed the august compact, the forerunner of the present constitution; that on Friday George Washington was born; that on Friday Bunker Hill was seized and fortified; that on Friday the surrender of Saratoga was made, and on Friday Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown.

The Palmer Journal says:—Father Cuddihy, the Catholic priest at Milford who has become somewhat unpleasantly notorious from his opposition to the decoration of Catholic graves by the Grand Army boys, forbade them to decorate the Catholic Cemetery last week as usual. He does not object to the strewing of flowers, but draws the line at the placing of flags on the graves which he says is not in keeping with the tenets of his church. He locked the cemetery gates, but the members of the post scaled the fence and now the reverend father threatens to prosecute them for trespass. He makes a big mountain of a wonderfully small mole hill, and would cut a much better figure by shutting his eyes to whatever infraction of church tenets there may be in the simple act of placing a small flag on a grave.

WHAT PARENTS FEAR.—Many persons, especially parents, object to many quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's Tonic does not involve this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor.

A youth in Orange, who was violently interested in the story of William Tell, tried a few days ago to shoot a tin cup from his father's head. At last accounts the cup was good as ever, and the old man's funeral was largely attended.—Boston Post.

Why do you set such tough chicken before me?" indignantly exclaimed a fair damsel in a restaurant the other day. "Age before beauty, always, you know, ma'am," replied the polite attendant, who well knew how to serve his employer and a tough chicken at the same time.—Stars and Stripes.

"It's a daisy" was the remark of all who examined the new hose wagon of No. 5, which arrived by the noon freight from Concord, Tuesday noon. The wagon was taken from the cars and exhibited on the Square until about 2 o'clock when one of H. N. Batchelder's horses arrived, harnessed to the wagon, which was taken to the town scales when it was found to tip the beam at 1440 pounds. The following description is taken from one of the Concord papers, of a recent date:

"The Abbott Downing Co. has just finished a hose wagon for the Peabody, Mass., fire department, which is the most complete and elegant piece of workmanship in that line, ever turned out by that company. It has capacity for 1000 feet of hose, and is provided with side lights and lanterns, iron bar, fire hook, jimmy or Detroit door opener, and an axe, all of which are secured to the sides of the wagon by unique devices, and in such positions as to be very convenient for use, and at the same time out of the way. It has also a brake and large gong, both of which the driver can work with his feet. The wagon is painted a handsome shade of carmine, and is elaborately and tastily decorated with blue and gold, the result representing several weeks' work of the ornamenter, Chas. T. B. Knowlton, of Pittsfield. The pictures in oil on the standards of the seat, by the same gentleman, are especially noticeable, and are highly creditable to the skill of the artist."

The above gives a pretty good description of the new piece of apparatus, which is about 9 feet long. The bottom of the wagon is made with spaces for the circulation of air through the hose. On the sides and end is a nickle plated hand rail and an iron bar for fire hats to hang on. Side steps are provided and a step and tool box hangs at the rear of the body. On the blue panel on each side is the name Hose Wagon 5, and on the tool box the word "Peabody" is painted. A painted canvas cover is made to stretch over the body of the wagon, and is tightly strapped to the sides. There is room for three men to ride on the seat and as many more can ride on the step. The wagon cost $510 or fully $160 less than a hose carriage of the same firm's make. Hose 5 are the last company to get new apparatus and it is very certain that they have got the best. The Engineers should now purchase a swing harness for the company, and they will then be one of the best fixed in the department. Engineers Reed and Tibbetts were the committee in charge of the purchase of the new wagon.

Engineer Tibbetts has sold out his dining saloon in Salem to Daniel Gillis, and will remain in town and on the Board of Engineers.

Chief Engineer Goodhue of Beverly and several Beverly firemen were in the Central station, Sunday. They expected to see the new wagon.

The Directors of the Relief Association held a meeting Monday evening.

What is to hinder having a parade of the fire department this Fall? All the companies now have good apparatus and would make a fine appearance on parade.

Wm. H. Pingree, formerly janitor of the brick engine house, who has been in San Antonio, Texas, for the past four years, met with an accident last March by which his left shoulder was injured, and has not been able to do any work since. He has been visiting the Hot Springs in Arkansas to see if he could obtain any relief. He was a member of Holten Lodge I. O. O. F. and has been put on the sick list.

An indignation meeting was held in Danversport Monday evening, at which the whole village took part. The subject under discussion was the action of one of the Board of Engineers in refusing to approbate a young man as a member of Hose 3 in that town. Several attempts had been made to get the man approbated, but had failed in each instance. The meeting decided to present the man's name to the Board for approbation at the next meeting.

The Telegram reporter says that the directors of the Relief Association held a meeting Monday evening and made arrangements for an entertainment. This is the first intimation that the Association has had of any such arrangement. We think that the reporter has got the Association mixed up with the Edgewood Club. Since the attempt at running an entertainment by Steamer 2, it is like shaking a red rag before a bull, to mention "running a show" to any of the firemen.

The insurance on the E. & A. Mudge property in Danvers Centre, lately destroyed by fire, has been adjusted through the agency of O. B. Chadwick & Co. as follows:

On building,	$14397.00
Engine and boiler,	1270.00
Stock,	33598.49
Machinery,	19645.04
Total.	$68910.53

Engineer John H. Tibbetts has moved into the Blaney house on Warren street.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Look out for weather!

Mr. Charles Brown is very sick at his residence on County street.

The L. & B. Horse Railroad Co. carried nearly eleven hundred passengers last Sunday on this end of the route.

The attention of the L. & B. Co. should be called to the bad condition of the new switch that was put in below W. E. Reed's store on Lynn street.

Conductor Basford has been unable to attend to his work owing to an accident which befell him while getting on to his car in Lynn. It is hoped that he will soon be able to attend to his work.

The new hose wagon of Hose 5 arrived yesterday and was brought to the house by one of Mr. H. N. Batchelder's bay horses.

One of the children of Mrs. Richard Morrow, on Lynn street, is sick with scarlet fever.

Hon. A. F. Breed, President of the Peabody & Lynn Railroad is on an extended western trip.

Mrs. Bessie K. Hussey died at her residence on Lynnfield street last Friday after an illness of several weeks. Her funeral took place from her late residence Monday afternoon, a large circle of relations and friends being present. The remains were placed in the family lot on Summit street.

MESSRS. EDITORS. Can you ascertain for me and answer through your columns to the following questions:

1st. When was the G. M. Dodge Post organized in this town?

2d. When did they have their first fair?

3d. When did they break up or have their charter taken from them?

X. Y. Z.

Organized about 1869. First fair held in the winter of 1870. They surrendered their charter sometime in April, 1879. These figures are not official but were received from Adj. W. M. Ward who will verify them next week.—[EDITOR.

Children's Services were held at the Church last Sunday, Rev. J. W. Colwell officiating. The floral display was very beautiful and tastily arranged, and the exercises of unusual interest.

To the surprise of all at the close of the services at the church, Sunday, a letter was read from Rev. C. C. Carpenter, by Rev. S. L. Gerould of Goffstown, resigning his pastorate which he has filled with such acceptance during the past five years. His health and waning strength call for his release from such arduous labors. Mr. Carpenter has been an earnest, faithful friend of every good cause and work in this town, a devoted pastor, and the town and society will feel his loss beyond expression.—Manchester Union.

NOTES

I have often wondered how a number of men about the square, who had been in the habit of taking a glass of "that which cheers and often intoxicates" for years could get along without it under the present prohibition system. The matter was made clear recently by one of the number. It seems that a young man who is engaged in work that occupies only a part of his time, has provided himself with a bag, in which he carries a supply of liquor and makes his daily rounds among the veterans, and each is furnished with his favorite beverage. In this way he has worked up a profitable little business and avoids the detection of the police.

The papers are talking of a convention to be held shortly to show up the meanest man in the United States. The meanest man lives right here in this town, at least I think so and will let you judge for yourself. He has a piece of land at South Peabody and hired a couple of boys to go up and help him plant it. He agreed to pay them fifteen cents a piece, and after working nearly half a day, this is the way he settled with them. First, he took out three cents for the time they sat on the wall, while he went and got a lunch for himself at the horse car office, and then he charged them five cents each way for riding with him, behind his lame horse with a nail in his foot, because the horse cars would have charged them that amount. This left a balance of two cents coming to the boys and that amount they received.

A good joke is told on a certain representative of a tobacco house who was going fishing last Monday and went into one of our drug stores just before starting to get some corks for "floats." While in the store a noise was heard like the popping of a cork and the traveling man thrust his hand in his coat pocket and brought out a beer bottle from which the prohibited fluid was pouring at a lively rate.

A son of one of our well-to-do farmers boarded a train for Lowell one day last week, with sixty dollars belonging to his sire, and started out to see the world. He was overtaken at Lowell the same day by his father and only two dollars and a half had been spent. His trip has been postponed.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Miss Addie Pitman, of Salem, has been engaged as Contralto of the Unitarian choir, of this town, for the present. Mr. MacGregor has also been engaged as tenor. This gentlemen formerly sung in the choir, and his return is gladly welcomed.

Harry Stockwell, of this town, took part in a Musicale given by Mr. Bessom in Marblehead, Monday evening. Mr. Bessom has a number of piano pupils here.

F. C. Record, of the Thalia Concert Co., of Salem, will lead the Orchestra at the Old Orchard House, this summer. Mrs. Walker, the Soprano, of the same company, has joined another company. Mr. Fisher, we learn, is going to California, so that the company will be pretty well scattered. Their performances this season were well received.

The popular concerts in Boston, Music Hall, three times a week, are really proving a success. The attendance is increasing, and the music is the best of its class. The price of admission is only twenty-five cents.

The Salem Schubert Club will reduce its prices for active members the coming year to $1.50. The tickets for associate members will also be reduced to $3.00, entitling the holder to one ticket to each rehearsal, and two tickets to each concert. There will be two concerts instead of three. The Club will have therefore more opportunity for study, but as far as the public are concerned the reduction in number of concerts is to be regretted.

At the Baptist Church last Sunday, Miss Chandler, a soprano singer of Salem, took the place of Miss Clemons, and Miss Ida Farnum sang alto in place of Mrs. Bartlett.

CLASS PROHECIES.

Returning to town on a visit, after an absence of ten years, I thought of my former friends and classmates, and set about inquiring as to what had been their fate during the intervening time.

I had learned some time before that Rose(the well known artist of the class, who used to sketch everybody's profile) had indulged her artistic taste by taking drawing lessons, but, alas, the teacher proved to be young and fascinating and before half a dozen lessons had been given, the charms of the Rose proved too many and the natural result was, they went into partnership.

My first object was to behold again the scenes of my former trials and triumphs, so at the first opportunity I proceeded in that direction,but on passing that well remembered sand-bank, (o'er which we had toiled so many times while the hands of the clock in the steeple near by pointed so provokingly at two minutes of eight)I glanced up. But could my eyes deceive me? There on the site of the old building was a handsome brick affair, which little resembles the old one. I was again happily surprised, for on entering the building two of the teachers proved to be Flavia amd Lillian Tudbury. Here they had succeeded in fulfilling the ambition of their school-days, as teachers of the languages, in which they were always so proficient.

On retracing my steps towards the square, I looked for the old bill board on which were posted the various circuses, shows, etc., coming to town, and from the habit I had acquired so long ago, I looked to see what was the coming event. It happened to be a minstrel troupe this time and among the many pictures and illustrations was one, although it had curly wool and a dark complexion, I could not be mistaken. That smile! Only Harry Poor could possess such a beaming countenance. And I was not mistaken for above in large characters, I read as follows: Mr. Harry Poor wlli appear Monday evening with an entirely new collection of songs and jokes, accompanied by his renowned troupe.

As I was meditating over this announcement and wondering if Harry could make up such hideous faces as of old, somebody spoke to me and turning around saw that it was Katie Cassidy upon whom I had come so unexpectedly. She and Mamie Cummings (who had the same ardent affection for each other as ever)had set up in the dressmaking and millinery business, and are becoming quite famous for always having the latest fashions.

Crossing the Square, a small sign on the brick building opposite attracted my attention, for on it in neat gilt letters was J. Murphy, Attorney at Law. I thought to myself that James would make a successful lawyer, for he was always good in an argument, and would surely win his point, even if it did take a long time.

Walking down Main street, I almost fancied that I should see Harry Hutchinson coming along on his bicycle, for that street to a certain distance was (for some reason not very hard to guess) a favorite ride of Harry's, but I remembered that there was no occasion for that now, as he has settled down, and the greater part of his time being devoted to his chosen work, for Harry is to be a great architect, one of his earliest works being the new High School building.

During the week I attended one of the lectures, which were being held as usual at that season of the year. I had not thought to inquire as to what was the subject of the lecture, but on entering,, perceived that the stage was covered with glass tubes, flasks, etc. The Hall seemed unusually full and it appeared as if the lecturer must be some great favorite. I soon saw that the attraction was no other than Mr. Frank Lane, who had become very popular as a speaker on subjects in Chemistry. Lane was always fond of that science and many were the hours he would spend in his den concocting some mixture to which he was always ready to give a long name.

Sitting in front of me was a gentleman of quite distinguished appearance and with something of a foreign air about him. Seeing me glancing in that direction, my companion asked me if I did not recognize my old classmate, Eben Osborn, and went on further to state that he had been abroad for several years but had lately returned and was giving private lessons in French, to a class of young ladies.

Another familiar face I saw that evening among the audience, which wore the same happy-go-lucky expression as ever, for Frank always appeared to be perfectly pleased with himself and the world and was, also, always in perpetual motion, more so now than ever for he is the editor of a daily newspaper and therefore always on the lookout for the latest events and there's not an accident, elopement or a dog lost but what an account of it appears in the columns of his paper.

On attending the church on the Square, Sunday morning, I missed the pleasant face of Nellie Messer, but this was accounted for by her former teacher in the Sunday School, saying that she had married a missionary, and had gone to South Africa, where she is doing much good.

Nellie Taylor, I came across while riding in West Peabody. She was keeping a private school for children, several of whom were clustered about as if very much attached to their teacher. I asked for her companion on the train, but May, at this time was travelling, having finished her college education. I had read before of the laurels she had gathered as a young author, not of romance but of more substantial works.

But where is Whipple that I have not seen his familiar form in any of the public places? The cause I soon ascertained was, that he had so many engagements as a popular singer, that little of his time could be spent in his native town and I wondered if he now ever had those convenient little colds, which never used to fail in his obtaining an excuse from that musical exercise.

Another of the class who seemed to have chosen the stage as his profession was James McKeen. We all expect in time that he will succeed to the position of Booth, in acting the prominent parts in Shakespeare's tragedies for even in his school days the strongest force of the most thrilling passages were wonderfully executed by our Arthur.

While reading Taylor's paper one evening I came across this announcement:—"This evening at the rink there will be a contest between the Peabody and Gloucester polo teams, and it is expected that it will be one of the most scientific games of the season, as George Bodge, the well known champion poloist, will play with the Peabodys." It is said that Teddy has eclipsed Cotter and Felton and has won many prizes.

The saddest fate of all was that of Brown. His friends always looked forward to his making his fame as an orator, for surely when at school he showed a great tendency in that direction, but we were doomed to disappointment since, for some unknown reason he has renounced the world and is living a lonely hermit in his retired cot—a life of single blessedness.

Last but not least of my former classmates was Hamie. She was walking along the street with a music book under her arm on the way to some pupil's house. As I see the last of her petite form disappearing around an adjoining corner, there sounds a loud, clanging noise which brings me with a bound out of bed, for it is the deep tones of the Methodist bell as it strikes seven o'clock, and with the future of my class mingling in faint confusion in my mind, I hurry off to meet them once again.

If these wild fancies of imagination are not fulfilled you have my best wishes for your success in whatever you may undertake. MAMIE L. HAYES.

CLASS CHRONICLES.

Three years ago, when his class destined to be so distinguished, entered upon the not too cumbersome duties of the Peabody High School, as Juniors, Teddie was but thirteen.

Latin, Algebra, Physiology, Composition and Reading were the subjects brought to our notice for serious consideration.

Will those who were launched forth in the rudiments of Latin, ever forget their struggles with "indirect discourse" or the discussion upon the albative of the first declension?

Lives there an '85-er "with soul so dead" who has forgotten the weary weeks spent upon "quadretic equations?"

How surprised Arthur Brown looked when his attention was called to the fact that the framework of his body was composed of two hundred and one bones. With the aid of Messrs. Hooker and Sewall, we advanced far and deeply into the study of Physiology.

Composition hour, too, proved a laborious burden, but to others was the most pleasant of the day, perhaps because it was the last.

But twice a week did we indulge in Reading, but when we were obliged to commit our lesson it seemed too often. Our favorites were "And darest talk thou to me of brothers," and "Out of the North the wild news came." Jimmy will doubtless think with vain regret of the looking-glass in connection with Reading.

Cambridge offered some mysterious attraction to many, and soon her place was vacant; she has never been heard from since.

California nobly came to the rescue, sending her daughter Lillie to console us.

Seated at her piano, day after day, practicing intricate finger exercises is May Abby, who stayed with her class but a little while.

Although he tarried with us but a short time, we missed him sadly when he deserted us. In "the Hub" he may be found, hard at work. To know our Nichols was to love him.

Annie joined us, but no sooner was firmly established than she vanished as unceremoniously as she had come.

In the sweet Spring time measles claimed a few, and when we returned, Henry, at least, was sadder and wiser.

For matrimonial reasons our second assistant gave over her position to a new teacher who continued her work until the close of the year.

Passing over two months which were spent in recuperating, we were received by three new teachers, one of whom soon left for a superior position. The vacancy was filled by our present first assistant.

With sincere distress we found a number of our boon companions missing. Jennie is at home "in the bosom of her family."

The manufacture of fragrant Havanas has been Joe's work.

Since Nellie vanished she has never been heard of.

Mamie, now a dressmaker, can cut and fit a garment almost as well as her famous employer.

Our classmate and friend, Nellie Dodge, most sweet and lovable, left us never to return. With the cold winter winds her illness became more and more serious and soon she passed over to the other side, sincerely mourned for by those who had known her.

It was in this, our second year, that Frank began to exhibit his taste for Chemistry and ever since he has been a lover of Reaction and Combustion.

Those of a philosophical turn of mind had ample opportunity for reasoning, and such prodigies as our other Frank and Secretary Hutchinson proved to be, to say nothing of Hamie and Eben!

Flavia and Lillie always excelled in Latin and with their help we went through three books of Cæsar successfully.

Our mathematicians did credit to themselves and their class in Geometry. Jimmy, Vice President McKean, and May were among the foremost.

We hold our breath and tremble when Roman History comes to mind. It is a subject almost to painful to mention. Yet there were a few who went through without a murmur. Katie's, "Peter's," and Eben's forte was History. We were all glad to learn the last lesson, which was done thoroughly for was it not concerning the fall of the Roman Empire?

Our drawing was very enjoyable and now we are all artists of the highest grade.

Regular singing lessons began with a special instructor, but of our progress in that branch what is to be said?

Our chemist, sad to relate, was absent for a while, and when, after his prolonged sickness he returned, "joy reigned supreme."

An association of four of our young ladies was formed called the "L. Q." which is now inactive, owing to the admission of four honorary members who have reduced it to its present state by their distrust and ridicule.

Down in a school room at Manchester-by-the-Sea, our Californian representative rules with her "rod of iron" and successfully, let us hope, instills the mighty truths of "the three R's" into those helpless youths.

It was just before the November election when Arthur arose and made his maiden political speech, which was answered by a presuming Junior. Gen. Benj. F. Butler was the theme and they, hot youths, fought bitterly and long until politics became a forbidden subject.

Our boys were exceptionally fine orators. To hear George, commonly called Teddie, speak his little piece would bring tears; and our Secretary is indeed a "second Daniel Webster" or would be if he composed his own speeches.

Another vacation and we are again found in the "temple of learning," but with a new dignity for are we not "most potent, grave and reverend" Seniors?

Wilfred, a graduate of last year is still with us, advancing with Frank in Analytical Chemistry and the class in Trigonometry, which study is most interesting on account of the out door rambles which it involves.

French had been a favored study and each has distinguished himself in pronunciation if in nothing else. Harry Poor certainly takes to French "as a duck to water;" we are justly proud of him.

Nellie's chief delight is Botany and Nellie Messer is a shining light.

There are certain apple-trees in a certain orchard through which we passed in one of our walks in behalf of Botany. Did ever "Porter's" taste so well before?

When the swallows were homeward flying another Nellie left us to pursue her musical studies and attend to household cares.

English Literature was studied with thorough enjoyment on the part of every scholar, especially during the latter part of the year when we read Shakespeare, Harry nearly always having the fool's part. What an amiable King Lear, Arthur made. "Pete," Mame, and Frank figured prominently in "As You Like It."

Xenophon's apt pupil, James Arthur, did admirable work, and likewise all those four who labored with Greek.

It may be more comforting to the citizens, but certainly not to the scholars, to remember the rule "Don't cross the railroad track," our Rubicon as we called it.

Our school-life here is done and "the Rubicon" is ours to cross if we will. The three years we have spent together have been short and happy ones. Our burdens have been few and light, our privileges many, and we are, I am sure, every one grateful to our teachers, the town, and George Peabody for the education we have received in the High School.

CHARACTERISTICS OF LONGFELLOW'S POEMS.

Longfellow began his career as a poet, when quite young; at the age of sixteen or seventeen, he sent his first poem—that was ever published—to the editor of a local paper in Portland. The subject is believed to have been "Lovewell's Fight;" the poem has been searched for, but as yet, in vain. In the "Gazette of Maine" for May 24, 1825, there appeared an ode on the same subject, written by Longfellow (then eighteen years of age) for the Commemoration at Fryeburg. Before he was nineteen, he had written a number of poems, some of which found their way into schools, and seem to have been successful, while others were published in the newspaper, and even traveled across the seas. Our author being endowed with a thoughtfulness, which at times was almost sadness, showed in his earlier poems, as well as the later ones, a certain "pensiveness of sentiment," as a quotation from "Autumn" will show:

> 'O what a glory doth this world put on
> For him who, with a fervent heart, goes forth
> Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
> On duties well performed, and days well spent!
> For him the wind, ay, and the yellow leaves,
> Shall have a voice, and give him eloquent teachings,
> He shall so hear the solemn hymn that Death
> Has lifted up, for all, that he shall go
> To his long resting-place without a tear."

When his early poems appeared before the public, they seem to have won for him, then, a praise and merit, that did not diminish as he became more widely known, and more frequently read. It has been said that Longfellow stood alone when he began to write. At that period, American Literature was but in its infancy; newspapers were not very numerous, and what few there were, devoted much of their space to theological disputation which was narrow and limited. Of the productions of other authors, he knew comparatively little the works of Mr. Charles Brockden Brown of Philadelphia, among which were the "ghostly romances" "Ormond," "Arthur Mervyn" and "Clara Howard," were written some eight years before Longfellow was born.

Irving produced "Salmagundi" about the same time, while Bryant's "Thanatopsis" was not issued until after Longfellow was nine. Hawthorne was his classmate, Whittier was unknown, and the novels of Cooper, had not, as yet, made their appearance. Thus, we see, that had Longfellow depended on others for his poetical ideas, we doubtless would never have had "Evangeline," "Hiawatha," or "The Courtship of Miles Standish." In his attack on Longfellow, Edgar A. Poe took the stanza above-quoted from "Autumn," and another from "The Sunrise on the Hills," as positive proof that the poet stole from Bryant's "Thanatopsis," but by reading the whole of either of those poems, one finds the idea to be original with Longfellow. His originality, however, has been otherwise questioned; some claim that he has imitated this or that writer, and others think that he has gotten the ideas of more than one poem from some of the older authors.

There seems to be no doubt, in some instances, at least, but that this last charge contains some truth. Take, for example, the "Tales of a Wayside Inn;" evidently they were suggested by an acquaintance with the works of Chancer; other instances could probably be cited. But who does not take ideas from some one about him, especially from those who are engaged in the same occupation? If we all were contented with simply our own ideas, and never took the time or trouble to see what views others might have on the same subject, there would be but little advancement in literature, science, or, in fact, in any department of thought. In my opinion, it is a necessity to be acquainted with the ideas and expressions of other people, for in that manner only, are we to see in what degree we advance beyond our predecessors.

In his sketch of Longfellow, O. B. Frothingham says,—"Mr. Longfellow's poetry has more originality and independence than is commonly supposed. For example, the 'Psalm of Life,' which is now so hackneyed, was, when it first appeared, remarkable as a protest against the hopeless apathy of human endeavor that marks the book of Ecclesiastes." It can hardly be said that Longfellow confined himself to any particular class of subjects, for whatever his thought happened to be, that, he wrote. The writings of his pen seem to be but the expressions of his heart, for he, himself, tells how he has arisen at three o'clock in the morning—after a sleepless night—and written a poem. Most of his poems were prompted by some incident happening at the time, the suggestion of a friend, or the paragraph of a newspaper, and were intended to convey some truth or profitable thought. Thus, "The Wreck of the Hesperus" was written after a terrible gale along this coast, during which many vessels were lost, not a few being stranded on the reef of Norman's Woe; the poet, however, allowed his imagination to have free scope, and he pictured the scene more vividly than the bare facts would warrant.

"Excelsior," written upon the back of a letter from Charles Sumner, was suggested by a word printed in an old newspaper. It was intended to convey the idea of ever pressing onward; in a letter to the editor of the London "Telegraph" he says,—"This was no more than to display, in a series of pictures, the life of a man of genius, resisting all temptations, laying aside all fears, heedless of all warnings, and pressing right on to accomplish his purpose. His motto "Excelsior," means "higher." 'The Skeleton in Armor," was associated with the Round Tower at Newport, and some have taken the poet's fancy to be fact. In the longer poem, "Evangeline," the main thought was based on facts, while the more minute details were drawn from the imagination of the poet. Accounts have it, that Longfellow, himself, never visited Acadia, and that the original story was told by a French Canadian,—prejudiced against the English,—who had himself received the tale merely from hearsay. Whether these be facts or not, the poet got enough from them, to cause the people of Europe as well as of America, to wait impatiently till a sufficient number of editions could be published to satisfy the demand.

One historian, in his criticisms upon this poem, says—"there was no 'forest primeval,' no 'murmuring pines' or 'hemlocks';" that "the Acadians were not a simple, innocent people;" that "they were not all deported, only seven thousand out of thirteen thousand;" that "families were not designedly parted" and that "the perfomance of the English was not needlessly cruel, but the result of military necessity. Some claim that when the true history of the Acadians becomes known and written,—as it is not at the present,—it will affect this part of Longfellow's work, but whether it does or not, "there is not enough of prose history in it, for the author to be seriously compromised;" that Longfellow was no historian, is plainly shown in this poem. Quoting from Frothingham's "sketch" of Longfellow, we gather that he "was heedless of historical accuracy beyond the usage even of poets, and that he stretched the limits of poetical license, must, I think, be conceded. 'The Courtship of Miles Standish' is far from correct in point of fact. But, on the other hand, it may be urged that few poets have been so idyllic in their conceptions as he; have so evidently used the historical occasion as a frame work for the picture."

In "Hiawatha," the poet has again been accused of stealing; this time "borrowing" his measure and some of his material from "Kalevala," a Finnish work. But those acquainted with that work, say that "Hiawatha" would be a poor imitation. The larger part of the proper names and many of the expressions are from the Indian language and are not only difficult to pronounce, but meaningless, without the translations. In one respect, his poems are all alike, and that is, their utter lack of any humorous element. Longfellow is pre-eminently the people's poet and this would not be the case, were his writings of such a nature that only the educated could understand them. The author already quoted, compactly sums up Mr. Longfellow's reputation, when he says,—"Universality, is after all, in the long run, a test for greatness. Taking New and Old England together, Longfellow has more readers than either Whittier or Tennyson; especially if ranks and classes are considered, Longfellow meets the mood of the greater number of people." D. H. WHIPPLE.

WHAT AND HOW TO READ.

"Without books," says Bartholin, "God is silent, justice dormant, natural science at a stand, philosophy lame, letters dumb and all things involved in Cimmerian darkness." The power which by its magic art turns everything to a golden success is knowledge, and this must for the most part be obtained by reading. Whether we read good books for pleasure or profit, our reasoning powers are strengthened, new thoughts suggested, and literary taste and information acquired. The ultimate object of learning is to get wisdom, appreciation and just conceptions of all things about us. If one were to have before him a thousand tints and shades to select that which he preferred, he would be in a daze and think it a most difficult task. So it is in the matter of selecting books. One should be influenced by his inclination and find out what suits his mental constitution, as he would in choosing that which is best for his bodily health.

If he dislikes a book it is better to let it alone. "No profit goes where is no pleasure taken. In brief sir, study what you most affect." The fame of a book is not always a sufficient reason for our reading it. We cannot take another's opinion as to whether the book is good or bad for us and this is why Emerson's advice about reading none but famed books, should not be unconditionally accepted. If you have chosen your profession in life you should read accordingly all that bears upon it. Emerson in his "Essay on Books" tells us that he rarely read a book, written in another language, in the original, much preferring the English translation, for what is best in a book can be translated. But he having a thorough knowledge of many languages, was more capable of understanding translations than those unacquainted with any but their mother-tongue.

Concerning the morality of books writers disagree. We should consider the extent of the bad, and whether the purpose of the book is a good one; for nothing is perfect and for occasional offenses against good manners or good morals we must not,for instance, refuse to read Shakespeare. If the bad exceeds the good in amount then by all means we should lay it aside. Authors have always respected the ethics of their day, and what was once considered proper may not now be thought even allowable. Porter says, "A writer from what we call groseness or freedom of language of the time in which he lived, may be gross in language and description and yet not be impure." Not all books bearing on any subject should be read, for in reading too much one's mind is apt to get confused and knowledge mixed, only a fear of the very many but one should reflect on these. Books need attentive reading in order to become a part of ourselves, but if one read in order to be considered "literary," he will add more to his vanity than to his learning, and although gaining in head, lose in heart.

Read as Bacon says "for the glory of the Creator, relief of man's estate, to improve talents, and enable you to run the race in life." One should not be impatient at not seeming to read as rapidly as others, for those that read most rapidly do not always gain the most. It is best to carry reading along hand in hand with observations, for instance, if one is fond of painting and the fine arts, it will be beneficial to accompany a friend having such knowledge, to some collection or gallery of paintings and works of art. He will learn much from his friends' remarks and criticisms, and of the real worth of the works. It is well to observe landscapes and nature, and to compare with paintings and to seek conversation with those versed in art. Or, for an instance, in another field Johnson's "Lives of the Poets" used as a handbook, and accompanied by reading the authors of whom he treats, will aid one more in acquiring a taste for poetry and literature, than three or even six terms of ordinary text-book study of literature in school or College. Individual tastes most determine what proportion of time is to be spent on early English Classics. Few read more than one or two of Chancer's Tales. Reading Spenser will improve literary taste. Those of deep, poetic feeling read him fondly, while others merely admire. Men will never cease to admire and read Shakespeare. It is the duty of all to read Milton's "Paradise Lost," the pleasure of few. Some of his minor works are better worth study than "Paradise Regained."

Emerson, in the essay already referred to, says he might as well not have commenced as not to mention the best book of all, the Bible. It is the expression of our conscience, the director of our daily lives, more to our purpose than the Almanac or daily paper. It is adapted to people of all tastes. Only the musical can enjoy to its fullest extent the flow of the harmonious portions. The appreciation of different portions depends on certain habits of mind in us. Spiritual as well as merely intellectual insight is needed to understand the Scriptures. For those who are fond of literature, the Bible will have a different value, for the Bible is admitted to be the most curious book in the world. It contains more knowledge of the human life and heart, than all the writings of Shakespeare, Horace, Clarendon, Thucydides and as many others as we please to mention. The poetry of the Bible deserves attention. It is natural and simple. By committing portions to memory we cultivate a taste for poetry. Wordsworth knew no poetry finer than that of Jeremiah. Coleridge considered Romans the finest part. In conclusion it may be said that the common

A Terrible Case of Scrofula Cured by

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"In the winter of 1879 I was attacked with Scrofula in one of the most aggravating forms. At one time I had no less than thirteen large abscesses over and around my neck and throat, continually exuding an offensive mass of bloody matter disgusting to behold, and almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible to fully describe my sufferings, as the case was complicated with Chronic Catarrh. After three years of misery, having been treated by three physicians, I was worse than ever. Finally, on the recommendation of W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. And now, after having taken twelve bottles, within the last twelve months, the scrofulous eruptions have entirely ceased, and the abscesses have all disappeared, except the unsightly scars, which are daily becoming 'smaller by degrees, and beautifully less.' I do not know what it may have done for others, but I do know that in my case, Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved an effective specific indeed. As an evidence of my gratitude I send these facts unsolicited, and I am ready to verify the authenticity of this cure, by personal correspondence with any one who doubts it." CHARLES A. ROBERTS, East Wilson, N. Y.

This statement is confirmed by W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, N. Y., who calls the cure a great victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Send for book giving statements of many cures.

NELLIE MESSER.

CLASS MOTTO.

AGE BENE, QUOD AGIS.

Not only for the class of 1885 should our motto, "What you do, do well" be a rule of conduct, but for every class and for every pupil individually and for the merchant and mechanic as well. What branch of labor will the observance of this motto not benefit, and to what occupation can it not be applied? It can be followed with equal advantage and profit by the child at play, by the pupil at school, by the general reader, in short, in any pursuit that can be mentioned. The child can derive the full enjoyment from his play only by entering into it heartily and entirely. The student should have a higher ambition in his study and strive for something more than merely to learn each day's lessons only for that day and cram only for examinations. The study may be very uninteresting to him but let him remember that the pleasure taken in study would be increased and half the drudgery removed by endeavoring to practice our motto.

"Every action," Ruskin says, "down to the drawing of a line or utterance of a syllable is capable of a peculiar dignity in the manner of it and capable of a still higher dignity in the motive of it." He, who lived up to this ideal would leave small cause for erasures in his writings and but few mistakes to regret in his life. This sentiment would not tolerate the exclamation of a boy "Only one cent out of the way!" if an inaccuracy in his work were to be discovered, and he might be fitly rebuked by the teacher for falling short of perfect conscientiousness. There is an anecdote of Daniel Webster which illustrates the value and use of thoroughly mastering details. He once had need to examine closely the facts in a certain law case. After all his careful research he had no occasion to use them in that case. But they were so firmly impressed on his mind by his thoroughness that he did not soon forget them. In after years when he had occasion to use these same points they were given as accurately as if he had just searched for them.

Never perhaps were school advantages as great or books as plentiful as at the present, nor were books more read but less studied. People who read so much that what they read is of no use, may be compared to a kind of pocket knife, which in addition to a common blade contains numerous other implements, but all so small that at the moment they are needed they are found useless. It is better to do a few things carefully, precisely as they should be done, than to do many things in a loose, slovenly manner. How easy it is to make beginnings and how hard it often is to finish, all can more or less attest. Individual energy is needed to carry the undertaking through safely. Some one says, "Assure yourself one completed action will yield yourself more pleasure and the world more profit than a dozen fair plans of which people say, 'This man began to build and was not able to finish.'" It is weak to make the mistake of thinking that a well-finished task is of no worth because it is not recognized as important; one should rather be satisfied with his own consciousness of right and feel that "The reward of a thing well done is to have done it."

Again Ruskin says, "However mean or inconsiderable the act, there is something in the well-doing of it which has fellowship with the noblest forms of manly virtue. For there is no action so slight, nor so mean, but it may be done to a great purpose, and ennobled therefore; nor is any purpose so great but that slight actions may help it, and may be so done as to help it much, most especially that chief of all purposes the placing of God. Hence George Herbert:

> "A servant with this clause
> Makes drudgery divine.
> Who sweeps a room as for Thy laws
> Makes that and the action fine."

Whatever is right then should be done with our best purpose accurately and thoroughly. "There is always a best way of doing everything." Emerson said, "if it be but to boil an egg." In a large mercantile establishment the eccentric proprietor gave to all boys on their first day the task of straightening nails; if they were faithful in this they were promoted step by step to more congenial work. By devoting all of one's energies to the work at hand the best results are achieved in art, literature and science. In literature it is the thorough and painstaking attention to details, even to the suspension of the work to search for a suitable word, that distinguishes between the best productions and inferior compositions. Almost innumerable examples might be cited to show that the greatest writers in all departments of literature were very careful about apparently minor points. It was the custom of Charles Dickens to walk among the poorer abodes of the city that he wished to describe in order to obtain the material for an accurate account of the mode of life of their inmates. If he found anything peculiar in face or appearance he scanned it closely for future use.

Shakespeare must have been an earnest student and a diligent worker. If he never had been a sailor as a naval writer asserts from the aptness of his sea-phrases, or a parson's clerk as a clergyman infers from his style, or a horse dealer as another insists, he must have been most intimately acquainted with all about which he attempted to write. As a contrast stands Coleridge with brilliant, intellectual gifts, who left not one completed work worthy of his endowments for lack of sufficient or sustained application. The same careful attention is necessary in art. It is said that in examining paintings of the old masters one is deeply impressed by the slow growth of their works owing to their scrupulous nicety. Painting was made their life-work on which they exerted all their efforts, till like Michael Angelo they were ready to say, "Painting is my wife, and my works are my children." Though none of us should ever become a Michael Angelo, a Shakespeare or even a Dickens, each one of us may be his own best possible self by making choice of what is, for him, the right vocation and then religiously living up to our chosen watchword, "What you do, do well."

MAY F. HERRICK.

PERFECTION OF THE UNSEEN.

VALEDICTORY ESSAY.

> In the elder days of Art
> Builders wrought with greatest care
> Each minute and unseen part
> For the Gods see everywhere.

In these few lines, taken from that exquisite poem, "The Builders," Longfellow has struck the key note of successful work. The poet would say to us that every part should be so scrupulously finished, that the whole work when completed, may be perfect. In the workshop, in the school, in nature, in the human character itself, or constantly find innumerable instances illustrating the imperfections as well as the perfections of the unseen. Many of the accidents that are constantly taking place, many of the horrors that fill the daily papers, have their cause from the imperfection of something unseen in the workshop. A vessel may sink at sea, explosions may take place, great buildings may fall, all because some little thing apparently unimportant, was not properly arranged. But, alas, these little things prove to be great powers towards the destruction of the work of which they are a part. "The Gods see everywhere." Is this true? Yes, it is true that many times we forget it.

Perhaps of all ages, none has been more forgetful of this than the nineteenth century. Everything is sham. In a recent book by a veteran teacher, "Talks with my Boys," there is an excellent essay, entitled, "Black the Heels of your Boots." If one thinks well on this, he will find that much lies behind this simple injunction. The deception of the age reaches all the way from not blacking the heels of one's boots up to many greater things. Much everywhere is sham, pretence and deception. What would be left in the world if the putty and varnish were removed from it? Of course there are multitudes of honorable exceptions. I remember hearing an anecdote which bears upon this subject. A young lady went to a dressmaker to have some work done. Her emphatic orders to the dressmaker were, "Finish the inside perfectly so that, if the dress were turned, the lining would look as well as the outside."

On the other hand, I heard a lady say once that she didn't care how the inside of her house looked if the outside were painted finely. In the school room, often, by carelessness in the preparation of lessons, we fail in some examination. Perhaps we do not learn a lesson because we think we shall not be called on to recite or perhaps we learn only the part for which we think we may be called on and let the rest go. I knew a boy who always stood at the foot of his spelling class, because he always counted to see which word would come to him and learned that word alone. Of course some one ahead of him would be sure to miss and he would have to spell some word he had not studied and, as a natural consequence, fail. "No excellence without great labor," the copybook says. A fine example of the perfection of the unseen is found in the development of human character. In speaking of character, I refer not only to the intellectual, but to the moral or as some one aptly calls it, the "culture of the heart." In regard to the intellectual, many instances may be found in history and Literature, of men who tried to do their work as well as they could in every particular. I remember reading of an East India merchant who, when asked what was the reason of his success, replied that he was not content to plan and leave his work to subordinates, but attended to every little detail himself. An example may be taken from the life of Milton. When commanded by the English Parliament to prepare an answer to Salmasius' attack, he wrote his "Defensio Populi Anglicani" which was so elaborate, that he lost his eyesight on account of his scrupulousness in having everything perfect. Sir Walter Scott wrote his novel Waverly, and threw it aside because he thought it was not perfect enough to have published, but when nine years later, it was published, it gave him a world wide reputation. Wordsworth spent twenty years of his life in correcting his famous poem, "Peter Bill" before he allowed it to be published. But this intellectual is only the outside or showy part of our character. The inside or moral side is the more important.

"Man looketh on the outward appearance but the Lord looketh on the heart." There is an old French proverb, "L'habit ne fait pas le moine" meaning the dress does not make the monk, and is equivalent to our proverb "Never judge by appearandes." Men and women may live to a good old age, and no one ever recognize their noble character and good hearts, but that should never deter any one from doing good deeds. Examples abound in history and Literature of statesmen and writers whose merits were not seen, and fully appreciated till after their deaths. The greatest example of this may be found in the life of Christ. During his stay upon earth, his labors were requited only with persecution and an ignominious death, but after he died, his efforts were recognized and from them sprang the Christian religion. Among those who break this law of the perfection of the unseen, may be ranked those who do something, that ought not to be done, because they think they will not be seen. A little boy and his father were in a field of corn. The father tried to make the boy steal some of the corn, but the boy refused, saying, though man might not see him, God would, because God saw everywhere.

Some of the finest illustrations of the perfection of the unseen are found in Nature. To a lover of the natural, much pleasure may be derived from examining those things which render both the animal and the inanimate world so beautiful. Suppose we take a walk in the woods. Everything upon which the eye rests, every tree, shrub, rock is perfect. The microscope reveals many beauties which the naked eye cannot see.

The atoms and molecules of matter of the same kind are arranged with surprising exactness. They are not merely similar, they are precisely alike. Even the heretic, the infidel who says there is no God, is confounded when you mention Nature to him. He is obliged to confess that there is some power who rules and governs the universe, and he says he believes there is a God of nature. How many of you have ever seen a geode? It is a stone, in outward appearance, very rough and uninteresting, but if broken open, the beauty of the inside dazzles the eye, for it is filled with brilliant crystals.

> "Before me lies a tiny crystal palace,
> With doors forever closed unless I choose,
> As fair as any lily's silver chalice
> When Night has dropped her offerings of dews."

As we go through life, dear classmates, let us always try to fashion our lives in the spirit of Longfellow's "Builders." This may be the last day at any school for some of us, while others may keep on at some institution of learning for a few years more. In either case remembering, that Nature never overlooks or pardons a fault or an imperfection, may help us in the performance of duty. If we leave school, we are taking up the burdens of the day and it will keep us there, as it will also do in our school studies, if we continue them, to remember that we are held responsible for everything that we do or that we are.

You surely know, dear teachers, that you must remember this injunction to remain or to become successful in your chosen work; and to you, schoolmates, our companions in the High School, let us give as a parting word, that which we know none truer or more fitting—"The Gods see Everywhere."

THE MASSACHUSETTS Legislature after one of the longest sessions in its history adjourned last Friday night. It has faithfully considered a large amount of business and many individual members have done a deal of work in committee and on the floor, and many important acts have been passed. Boston has come in for her share and the numerous acts passed are expected to be a benefit to the taxpayers of the city Among the more important* are the following:—Savings banks have been empowered to invest in the bonds and notes of incorporated districts of the State whose net indebtedness does not exceed five per cent. of their last preceding valuation and in the bonds of cities of more than 30,000 inhabitants; Justices of the Supreme Court may be retried at the age of 70 on three-fourths pay; Cities and towns are authorized to intrust certain appropriations to the G. A. R. Posts for disbursement. The leasing of large ponds for private fisheries is prohibited. The sale of liquor is forbidden between 11 P. M. and 6 A. M. and also the sale of liquor on any election day. The district police have been increased four members. A bill was passed to authorize the payment of checks, demand drafts, etc., in case of death of the drawer before payment. It has been provided that officers of any political committee may affix to the ballots issued by them a certificate of their genuineness, and the printing or issuing of any false, forged, fraudulent or counterfeit certificates is forbidden under penalty. A commission has been established for the registration and control of pharmacists and another for adjudicating upon the rights of new gas companies to open streets for their pipes, the latter commission to be supported by the gas companies. The law in relation to the attendance of pupils at the public schools, when there is small-pox, diphtheria, etc., has been amended, requiring pupils to have a certificate from the attending physician or Board of Health. In regard to the employment of children in factories the law now provides that no child under twelve shall be employed during the days when public schools are in session. The formation of cremation corporations has been authorized under certain restrictions. The fradulent procuring of papers, of naturalization have been made more difficult and subject to heavy penalities. The sale of trashy literature has been prohibited. The pupils in the public schools are to receive a certain amount of instruction on the effects of alcohol on the human system. The labor advocates have not had one successful measure passed; employers' liability and weekly and fortnightly payments have been defeated, and a bill to establish courts of arbitration between employer and employed passed the House, but was rejected by the Senate. The bill to exempt soldiers from the civil service law was defeated in the Senate. The Governor has not vetoed a bill during the session. The attempt to divide this and other towns, received the rebuke it deserved at the hands of the committee, only one being successful. As a whole the legislature has been a careful one, and not a law has been passed to which there can be a serious objection.

"I do love the old occupation, and considering the fact that after all the trials and tribulations of a life in Washington I have now returned to my farm to resume my pitchfork, that I have a right to feel that I am a farmer still."—Dr. Loring at Newburyport.

Close of the School Year.

GRADUATING EXERCISES OF THE PEABODY HIGH SCHOOL AT THE TOWN HALL, THURSDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 25.

The graduating exercises of our High School took place at Town Hall this afternoon and nearly every available seat was filled with the parents and friends of the graduates. The stage was attractively arranged and although the programme was long it was attentively listened to. It would hardly do for us to single out particular ones for praise, but we will congratulate all and the teachers upon the successful manner in which each part was sustained. At 2.30 o'clock the exercises commenced with a piano duet by Misses Goodwin and Messer. This was followed by the salutatory, entitled "Higher Co-education" by Miss Lillian M. Tudbury, who spoke as follows:

SALUTATORY.

The happy and prosperous periods of a country's life are said to be those which leave but little record on the pages of history. What our class of '85 has done or left undone is for the pen of the appointed chronicler to indite, but it may not be inopportune for me to recall at our last meeting, as pupils of the Peabody High School, how amicable our relations have been during our three-years' course in this school. If occasionally a ripple may have ruffled the surface of the waters to mark the difference between stillness, and stagnation, at least there have been singularly few of those rivalries, those secret jealousies and open enmities that so often mar the relations of fellow pupils of every sort. Although our student life has been so pleasant, yet we come forward with almost unmingled gladness to perform these last duties of our public school career.

We rejoice then, friends one and all, in this occasion for which we have assembled on this bright summer's day and, like the Romans with whom it was a custom to inscribe the word "Salve," "Welcome" on their thresholds and thus receive their visitors, we, the class of '85, most cordially bid you welcome.

HIGHER CO-EDUCATION.

"An African monarch fattens his mistress out of all shape; not, as travellers say, to humour a low sense of female beauty, but in obedience to the impulse of a deeply-rooted male jealousy. The Turk immures his wives in a dull Harem and feeds them on sickening sweetmeats, in revenge for the loss of a paradise, that he would be too stupid to enjoy. The Chinaman squeezes the feet of his women into lumps of helplessness; but the more ingenious European transfers the pressure to the female brain."

So says one of the most brilliant of the long line of distinguished Scottish teachers. About twelve years ago, the opponents of co-education thought that its death blow had been dealt by Dr. Clarke's book entitled Sex in Education. His rousing alarm rang out from his tower of professional eminence and his authority did and must attract attention. Dr. Clarke meant to prove that successful co-education, for physiological reasons, is an impossibility. Theoretically, he succeeded, as he thinks, but practically, he failed for the want of sufficient evidence. This book, by rousing an immense storm of argument and drawing the attention of all educators and cultured people to this question, has proved to be an aid to the cause of mixed schools and colleges. Picked to pieces again and again by the noble defenders of woman's right to education, the seeming substance of the book has been reduced to mere shreds. Facts, such as those contained in Miss Brackett's book "The Education of American Girls" to those who are honestly looking for the truth mean more than pages of theorizing.

Shall a girl have a college education? Answer this question as we may, or refuse to answer it, yet it will be heard. It has been stated that "a girl's education is properly said to be finished when she has attained a completely fashioned will which will know how to control and direct her among the exigencies of life, mental power to judge and care for herself in every way, and a perfectly developed body." The power of independent thinking without which there can be no judgment and which alone gives freedom, the real mother must have and hence girls should somehow, somewhere, be most carefully educated into it. Higher education for women is practically the same as co-education. If women are to have a higher education then why should they not pursue it in the most advantageous way and in the best colleges, and technical schools? It has been maintained by the opponents of co-education that women are not physically strong enough to endure the severe strain occasioned by a college course. That this is not true is evident from experiments in Cornell, Vassar, Smith, Oberlin, Michigan University and numerous less renowned colleges. But those who pretend to wish that this question should be decided adversely to women by facts are really the ones who do not bring them forward but base their position on assumed principles and on theory. As President White of Cornell has said, "to seek for information on the real results so far, of the experiments in our colleges from the authorities that have never tried it, is to commit the same absurdity as "if the Japanese authorities aroused to the necessity of railroads and telegraphs had corresponded with eminent Chinese philosophers regarding the ethics of the subject, instead of sending persons to observe the working of railroads and telegraphs where they were already in use." This question has been practically settled by experience but these facts are not allowed in evidence by those very ones who insist so much upon facts.

An able teacher who had taught thirty years once said that "it was not hard study that breaks down the girls' health but the circumstances under which they study, the demands of society with its follies and excitements. They wish to become accomplished as early as possible and so try to carry on twice the number of branches they ought to. Boys also break down in study from some of the evils of society. His experience and observation had convinced him of its safety and advantages." Dr. Mahan, President of Oberlin College for fifteen years, says that during that time the proportion of young men to young women who broke down under the strain of thought and study was two to one. These girls stood as high in their whole course and in their graduating exercises as the young men. He also feels sure that the most careful statistics would show among the women who are college graduates a higher standard of health than among the same number of women from any other class of society. But, are women able mentally, thoroughly to master the higher branches of study? The assertion that women are not able to do this has been answered by statistics and percentages in examinations. An experienced teacher once said that the ability of the girls to master the several branches is fully equal to that of the boys and when an amount of brain work is reached that is injurious to girls we have gone as far as is profitable for boys. The girls invariably keep up and oftener come out ahead than lag behind. Take for example the schools near home the Danvers or the Salem High School and our own and see if this is not true. Women have just as keen intelligence as men, perhaps less powers of reasoning but far finer abilities for languages and refinement of mental culture suits them even better than the other sex. One has said that "women are like the cavalry of the army. They have not the steady 'hammering away' which was Grant's one method, but there is about them a certain Sheridan like quality, light-armed, quick, irresistible." Bright boys learn lessons very much as bright girls do and slow girls as slow boys.

Nature is too varied to be content with a single basis of classification, and this thought leads to co-education. There is not one logic for men and another for women, and when we state intellectual principles we go beyond sex, or as has been said, "Knowledge is knowledge; and there is no more a specifical by feminine way of describing correctly the character of Spenser's poetry than there is a specifically feminine way of solving a quadratic equation." With the successes before us of Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois and Cornell Universities, it seems as if it ought to be an accepted fact that women are able intellectually to pursue a higher course of study. The world denies to women the same training that men have, and then says they are not able to enjoy it, and if women do obtain with difficulty a thorough training for great deeds then they are given only half compensation for their work. Why is it that the Harvard students are so opposed to women being admitted to their college? Are they afraid the standard will be raised? It is a well-known fact that the standard of Harvard is very low as compared with some of the girls' schools.

One of the most important benefit of co-education is the moral influence. And yet co-education has been opposed on account of the possible danger to the morals of the students. On theoretical grounds, it was stated that the girls would become mannish or the boys effeminate, and that sentimentalism would be developed with a subsequent harm to morals. But in practice it has been proved that while the boys acquired finer manners, the girls grew more truthful, sincere and courageous, and the sentimentalism has failed to appear. Pupils, brought up together side by side from early childhood, value each other for their individual qualities. Teachers of mixed schools have stated that there is less nonsense and less false sentimentality than where the boys and girls are kept separate. Schools are perfect educational republics and the young men and women meet on terms of entire equality and respect for each other. The boys are inclined to think themselves superior to the girls and are very conceited, but when they find that the girls can equal and in some cases excel them they have more respect for them. Each sex must teach the other and impart to the other. When the sexes have once been united in a school we rarely hear of their being separated afterward. But we constantly hear of their being brought together after separation. In the life of a school which is a small world, the pupils learn to measure their own acquirements and character by those of others, and are educated to the knowledge that individual feeling cannot be allowed as a rule of conduct. The discipline of the school trains them to value industry and perseverance, to scorn dishonest work, and to control temper. The low morality of Harvard students is almost proverbial. Would not the admission of young women to this college raise the ethical standard? Young women, while receiving the advantages of education under the restraining influence of young men, not infrequently impart a finer finish to the characters of the latter.

A speaker in the Massachusetts House of Representatives once said (when School Suffrage was under consideration) that men were always better for the society of women. "If all of us," he said, "would stay away from all places where we cannot take our wives and daughters with us, we should keep better company than we now do." This feeling has been and is growing more and more common among the better class of men. There can be no doubt that the increased association of the sexes in society in school, in literature, tends to purify these several spheres of action. It seems a wonder that they should be united in everything except in the higher education, the most refining of employments. "After all," says one, "the Divine model is to be found in the family; and the best ingenuity cannot improve much upon it."

CLASS SONG. (By Rose M. Munroe.)

With this last song we now must part
And bid each friend farewell;
We leave our studies and our school
For what we cannot tell.

In those familiar rooms no more,
Shall we as scholars meet,
And teachers all so kind to us,
We shall no longer greet.

The three short years of our school-life
So quickly there have passed,
That we can hardly feel as yet
The end has come at last.

Yet let not all these friendships die
When this our song is done,
But may the Future of our lives
Keep all the friends we've won.

PEABODY.

Miss Wilkins, first assistant of the Centre School had a pleasant call from the second class Wednesday afternoon and was presented with a large photograph album and a book of poems. Several other teachers of the school were pleasantly remembered. Miss Towne of the fourth class received from a part of her class an elegant gold mounted pencil. On the day of the examination of this class Georgie King presented his teacher with a large boquet of hot house flowers. Miss Whitney, of the Fifth class, received a statue, "By Jingo," which represents a bare-footed country lad paying close attention to one of his feet, he, evidently, having stepped on a thistle, or, as the boys expressed it, stubbed his toe. The position and expression are very natural. Miss Poor received a very pretty pair of vases.

Last summer a couple of the inmates of the Alms House eloped from that institution and spent the summer by seeing the sights in strange cities and towns. They got back again in the fall and have had comfortable quarters all winter. They again eloped and were doing their great act at Manchester, again this season when they were captured by the police yesterday and returned to town. They were in a filthy condition and half starved.

Charles P. Vaughn, of this town, who is attending school at Andover, will, during his summer vacation, canvass Peabody and Beverly to obtain subscriptions for "The Practical Home Physician," which seems to be a sensible book. The graduating class from the Wallis school gave their teacher, Mr. George F. Barnes, a pleasant surprise in the shape of a hanging lamp. During the exercises this morning it was hung at his residence and was in position to greet him as he returned to dinner. He will entertain the class at his home this evening.

Last Saturday, Representative W. H. Brown received his pay $664 for his legislative duties. Mr. Brown has made a good representative and did all in his power to prevent a division of the town. He has only missed one day during the whole term and then business called him to New York.

Mr. Geo. H. Collins, who bought the store of Starr C. Hewitt, has made quite a transformation there and one would hardly recognize the old store. Mr. Collins will open next Saturday with a stock not surpassed this side of Boston.

The famous fishing case of Nathan H. Poor's came before the Grand Jury the other day and the case was "quashed." They found no bill against him. Thus endeth the whole matter.

Augustus J. Shove, paymaster of the Lawrence Woolen Company, died of heart disease in Lawrence on Wednesday evening. Mr. Shove was the only son of the late Jonathan Shove of this town. He was educated at Dummer Academy, Byfiled, was and salesman of the Lawrence Woolen Company of Lawrence, of which company he had been paymaster since 1864. He married in 1852, Martha, second daughter of the late Capt. Parker Brown of Salem, who died on the 17th of March last. Mr. Shove had a very extensive acquaintance in Lawrence and Salem and among manufacturing people generally, and it may be said of him without fear of contradiction that he had the respect of all who knew him. He leaves but one child, Mr. Frank A. Shove of Malden, and a host of friends, to whom his quiet, faithful, unostentatious life was a blessing, and to whom his death will be a severe loss. His age was about 57.

A large congregation was present at the Methodist Church, last Sunday night, to listen to the concert given by the Sunday school. The church was elaborately decorated, and among the beautiful flowers and plants, were several birds, whose sweet notes were added to the general melody. The principal feature was the building of a light house each one contributing a block, with an appropriate verse, interspersed with singing by the school. The light house was completed and the light shone from the top. After which three little girls with lighted candles recited the verses, " you in your small corner I in mine" followed by singing from the school. A collection was taken because " it takes money to build a lighthouse." It was one of the most interesting services ever held in town.

The loss of E. & A. Mudge & Co., June 4, by the burning of their shoe factory, buildings, and stable, with their contents has been adjusted at $70,993.99. The firm claimed only what they thought they could show they were clearly entitled to, and there was not the slightest objection from any of the 43 insurance companies to granting the same. The firms insurance agent Mr. O. B. Chadwick, of Peabody and No. 30 Congress Street, Boston, displayed great energy and ability in adjusting this loss to the satisfaction of all parties interested, in less than two weeks. The matter was quite complicated, as there were 13 distinct divisions of the property, such as the different buildings, machinery, stock, etc., etc.

A very interesting programme has been arranged by the Essex Universalist Sunday School Union, for their picnic at Centennial Grove, on Wednesday, July 8th. Among the many different amusements will be the following free of cost. Band concerts, Dancing, Punch and Judy, Shot Gun, Wheelbarrow Races, Blindfolded Races, Rugby, Foot Ball, Base Ball, etc. Train leaves Peabody at 8.25(new time.)

Ayres, of Newburyport, chief marshal; David W. Lowe, of Gloucester, Supt. of Hall; C. Blunt, of Andover, Supt. of fair grounds. Francis H. Pope Barrett, chairman of the committee on agricultural implements.

In the recent exhibition of drawing and writing at town hall, the Bowditch school made a very good showing. They received the highest mark in writing, as follows. First class, first second and third;Second Class, the first and third; Third Class, the first and second; Fourth class, the first and second; Fifth Class the first and third; Seventh Class, the first second and third. In drawing, the Second Class, first second fourth and fifth and the Third Class, the first.

The selectmen have received a communication from State Commissioner Thayer which in substance says, that should any more deaths occur among Jacob Goodale's cattle, examinations of the stomachs and other portions of the animal's organs will be made free of expense, if the parts infected are only sent to the experimental station at Amherst. The Commissioner also recommends that Dr. John F. Wincheste take charge of the matter should furr ther trouble ensue.

Last Sunday, as a carriage belonging to Joseph Osborne, containing two ladies and a driver, was coming around the corner of Aborn and Washington street, the spokes in one of the hind wheels gave out and let the occupants to the ground, but doing no serious injury. The carriage had not been used for ten mouths, and had become dry.

Rev. Endicott Peabody and Miss Francis Peabody were united in marriage at Grace Church, Salem, last Thursday, and the wedding reception was held at the residence of the bride's father, on Collins street, Danvers. The guests were conveyed in coaches and barges through this town, making a large procession. After a trip to Europe they will reside at Groton, Mass

As Samuel Donnell, Jr., was driving along Federal Street, Salem, Tuesday morning his horse shied to one side and striking a tree threw him out. He held on to the reins and was dragged some distance and the team passed over him. It is feared he has injured the ligaments of one ankle. P. J. Lyons, who was with him stopped the horse.

The fast express train via the New York and New England railroad between Boston and New York is already one of the most popular trains running out of Boston. Apart from its excellent accommodations, it can be relied upon to be on time. It runs into the depot of either city promptly at 9 P. M., taking six hours for the trip.

Among the curiosities of the mail received last week, was a ruby-necked humming bird, sent from Stillwater, Michigan, to Miss Sadie Beckett, who is visiting on Washington street. It was a very diminutive specimen, but the changeable color upon the neck makes it very pretty. Probably it will adorn a bonnet.

Last week Mr. David T. Winter, through his attorneys, attached every balance due the New York, Lake Erie & Western Railroad in Boston, serving more than a dozen attachments. This is to secure the three thousand dollars awarded him for damages by being put off the companies train in New York state three years ago.

Last Sunday being the 58 birthday of Mrs. B. D. Hill on Washington street, the Dorcas society of which she is a member, called upon her and tendered her an old fashioned surprise party. During the evening Mrs. Hill was presented with a beautiful willow rocker. The party left at a late hour, having enjoyed a pleasant evening.

Mrs. Ruth A. Goldthwait, widow of the late Joseph E. Goldthwait, after a lingering illness, died at her home on Washington street last Thursday. She was 77 years of age and leaves two daughters to mourn her loss. Her funeral took place from her late residence last Monday afternoon.

Mr. Byron Groce of the Boston Latin School, and formerly of our high school, has been offered a professorship at Tufts' College. Mr. Groce, who is a graduate of that college, is now abroad, where he has been making researches in Greece.

A floral concert was held in the vestry of the South Church last Sunday evening and was confined mostly to the smaller children and was quite interesting. In the afternoon Rev. Mr. Debevoice addressed the children.

John J. Beers died at his home on Harris street last Wednesday while sitting in a chair. He had been sick nearly a year with consumption. When about twenty years of age he enlisted in the Navy and served three years.

Monday, the Portland Steam Packet company puts on its popular day line, leaving India Wharf at 8 A. M., and arriving in Portland at 4 P. M. This is a delightful sail, affording beautiful views of the entire north shore.

Just one year last Tuesday since Lieut. Greeley, and other survivors of his Arctic expedition, were discovered bp the U. S. relief expedition. Mrs. Greely is receiving congratulations on the birth of a baby boy.

Book Notices.

Few things are more fascinating in their way than a study of the subterranean history of man, whether in caves or in mounds, whether it be to corroborate written history, or to take testimony that ante-dates all writing. President Bartlett of Dartmouth, contributes an interesting article on this topic to the July number of the North American Review. Dorman B. Eaton, chief of the Civil Service Commission, gives his views of the results of that reform. These, with the batch of free-hand Comments, make up a number of unusual interest. Outwardly the Review renews its youth with a new cover, and inwardly it seems more vigorous than ever.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for July contains two articles which will attract considerable attention. The leading one, "England's Last Struggle with Russia," in which the Crimean War and the causes that led to it are described by T. F. Galwey; the other article is on "Victor Hugo." Both are profusely illustrated and intensely readable. American subjects in this number are, "The Grain Commerce of New York," by Oscar W. Riggs, with seven illustrations; "The Aztec Eagle, and when it was Found," and other Mexican Topics, by Mrs. Emily Pierce. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York, at 25 cents a number, or $3 a year, postpaid.

Ballou's Magazine for July has a timely article on China, accompanied by some capital illustrations. It is an important subject when France and China have so recently been engaged in a bloody struggle, and should be read by all. Following the principal story come short and pleasant tales, poetry, wit and humor, puzzle page, ladies' department. Ballou's is cheap and good. In it one can always find something to be interested in. Price, 15 cents per copy, or $1.50 per year. Address, Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley St., Boston, Mass.

The July Atlantic is a strong, bright and varied number. Miss Murfree has never shown herself to better advantage than in the present brilliant installment of "The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains." Charles Dudley Warner begins a series of papers of horseback travel in the South, M. H. Leonard has an interesting paper on "Southwestern Kansas seen with Eastern Eyes." Beside other pieces there is a long poem by Whittier, in his best manner, on St. Elizabeth and Elizabeth Fry. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for July begins the Eighteenth volume of this popular Magazine with an interesting descriptive article on "The Cathedral of the Incarnation," at Garden City Long Island, with illustrations of the Exterior and Interior of the Cathedral, a View of St. Paul's School for Boys, the See House, and a Portrait of Bishop Littlejohn. Dr. Talmage's sermon is on the "Noontide of Life;" he contributes also a tender article on the late "Mrs. Samuel T. Spear." The whole number has an unusually fresh and timely character. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York, at 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year, postpaid.

One of the cutest of A B C books is the "Household Primer." Each large letter has an amusing picture and a pretty verse. The whole is daintily printed in brown; and, best of all, is mailed free by D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, on receipt of a 2-cent stamp.

HE KEPT THE WHOLE HOUSE AWAKE.—WASHINGTON, D. C.—Mr. F. McCleary, a prominent solicitor of patents of this city, was troubled for several weeks with a severe cough, which not only deprived him of sleep, but annoyed others. The only thing that did him any good, he says, was the new preparation Red Star Cough Cure, a purely vegetable compound, free from opiates, narcotics or poisons of any kind.

Beethoven's favorite violin is now in the possession of an English gentleman named Kirmoald.

Fruit trees are so heavily laden in places on the Pacific coast that hundreds of laborers are kept employed thinning out the fruit.

TIRED, LANGUID, DULL.—Exactly expresses the condition of thousands of people at this season. The depressive effects of warm weather, and the weak condition of the body, can only be corrected by the use of a reliable tonic and blood purifier like Hood's Sarasaparilla. Why suffer longer when a remedy is so close at hand? Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will give you untold wealth in health, strength, and energy. (A)

The graduating class at Williams College numbers sixty this year. It includes both the Garfield boys.

THAT DIRTY DANDRUFF.—Dandruff is dirty and disagreeable in every way. It soils the clothing continually, and is accompanied by a hardly less annoying sensation of itching. The scalp is diseased. There is nothing in the world so thoroughly adapted to this trouble as Parker's Hair Balsam. It cleanses and heals the scalp, stops the falling hair and restores its original softness, gloss and color. Is not oily, highly perfumed, an elegant dressing. Very economical, as only a small occasional application keeps the hair in perfect condition.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It retains the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY CURES A TERRIBLE CASE OF GRAVEL WHEN OTHER HELP FAILED.

What is Gravel? what causes it, and who are most liable to it? It is frequently attended with acute pain, and unless relief can be found, produces inflammation and death. Both sexes and all ages are liable to it, although men who have reached or passed middle age are its most common victims. Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable medicine for Gravel, as the disease seems on the increase, and we are glad to say that such a specific is now before the public in the form of DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter, selected from many similar communications:

PITTSFIELD, MASS., March, 1884.

Dr David Kennedy.

Dear Sir:—You have a right to know, and I desire the public to know my experience with Gravel and my remarkable recovery through the use of your 'FAVORITE REMEDY.' I am a carpenter living in this place, and there are plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of Gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away, and I had little more trouble until last July, 1883. One day when at work in my shop I was suddenly seized with a keen and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said: "I can do nothing for you. Your case is incurable!" I was frightened and went to the second, who said little, but gave me a prescription. It did no good.

Then began a series of experiences the agony and horror of which words cannot depict. Think of it! I was sometimes taken in the street, and would fall, writhing with agony, upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven, I then heard of 'KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY," through Mr. P. P. Cooley. I had not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was nearly one-half an inch long. I persevered with the medicine, the symptoms gradually abated, and I have had no more trouble since. I am well, thanks to you and "FAVORITE REMEDY." Yours most gratefully,

JAMES D. KENNEDY.

What "FAVORITE REMEDY" did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to do so Address—Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

FAVORITE REMEDY

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5. by all druggists.

PEABODY

This warm weather helps the growing vegetation.

Straw hats and overcoats are allowable now, in the evening.

The new arrangement of the B. & M. will go into effect June 29.

"What is there in a bottle" asks an exchange. Being curious to find out we have asked several persens, including the correspondent of the Lynn Item, and without exception they have disclosed empty ones.

The firm of D. B. H. Power & Co. of Marblehead has found it necessary to have another strongly built furniture wagon for delivering goods, their largely increasing business demanding it. It is wonderful what enterprise and a liberal use of printer's ink will do. Although Marblehead is out of the line of regular trade, yet this firm have built up a business in the country second to none in the cities. They are young men and give their personal attention to the business, which has already reached large proportions. Their teams can be seen on the streets of nearly every town in this vicinity delivering goods. They have an advertisement in another column and invites you to call and see them.

These days of sunshine and wamth are spring fever generators, and have started the picnic sap to flowing. One begins to long for the shade of the tender leaves, the sensation of a spring industry, in the shape of a picnic ant ascending his pantaloon leg on the invisible side, and to know that the gorgeous map of Algiers, berry painted, but not where he can see it, is artistically decorating his garments. It is ime to agitate picnics.

The Wilmot Clothing Company have made a reputation for furnishing organizations with uniforms by the large number of bicycle clubs throughout the country that they have fitted. They have recently received orders to make the gray uniforms of the Danvers & Salem horse railroad drivers and conductors. We learn that Mr. J. Frank Boynton, the manager of the Wilmot Company, will present each conductor and driver with a cap.

Orrin Putnam, a lineal descendant of the pious witch of 1692, who resided at the Rebecca Nurse homestead in Salem Villiage, Danvers, is dead. He was a very worthy man, an industrious farmer, and was about 70 years of age. He was the father of Charles O. Putnam.

There is a third more travel on the horse cars on the Beverly end of the route than that of the Peabody end.—Beverly Times.

Perhaps you believe that yarn but we are of the opinion that you would find it hard work to prove it. Everyone admits that the travel from Peabody is more than double that of Beverly.

Messrs. Merrill & Mackintire have some very pretty little wooden ornaments, one of which is arranged for a pin-ball, on which are excellent and very faithful representations of the Roger Williams or Witch House, and also of the old First Church. They are exceedingly neat and tasteful.

The children have a rich feast in the June number of Our Little Ones and the Nursery, which is full of pretty pictures illustrating brilliant and fascinating stories.

Annual meeting of the Daughters of Rebekah Degree Mutual Benefit Association of Essex County, was held at Ipswich, Tuesday, June 2, T. B. Fall, of Ipswich, President; Sarah A. Rogers, of Ipswich, Secretary Eight new members were admitted.

The peculiarities of our New England climate were never more strangely exemplified than since the advent of 1885. The mercury indicated on June 1 the same number of degrees that it did on January 1, the glass standing in the same place on both days. This is certainly remarkable, and shows that were it not for the few days of extreme cold during the winter months the severity of the season would be greatly migrated.

WHAT PARENTS FEAR.—Many persons, especially parents, object to many quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's Tonic does not involve this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor.

We would remark for the benefit of boys, men, or any other person disburbing bird's nests or taking the eggs, that the fine is $10.00 and cost for each offence, and we wouldn't advise them to continue in the business unless they can afford to pay $10.00 each for eggs. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Found—Not far from the Lexington monument a first-class love letter. The letter is nicely written and the contents we should conclude embraces all the love that could be got on to a sheet of paper. But not being experts we are willing to revise it with the owner if he will call and prove his property.

The Glue Situation.

As the manufacture of glue is quite an important industry in this town, the following on the glue situation from the Commercial Bulletin is of interest:—The glue manufacturing season is now closed. It began in the latter part of September and the first of October, and extended to the middle or the last of May, being of average length. The season has been a fairly favorable one for glue making, but not much stress is laid on this fact as the large manufacturers have not been disposed to make the most of the season or crowd work in any way. They have pursued the opposite course, in fact. Advantage has generally been taken of all the holidays to stop work, and few risks have been incurred where the weather threatened to spoil the glues.

The production has been carried on at low pressure to correspond with the exceedingly dull and lifeless condition of the glue trade. Not only has the market been very dull but margins of profit have been worked down to a very fine point. At the present prices of glue stock it is almost impossible for the manufacturer to get a profit on ordinary grades of glue. Glue stock has held its own during the year for the reason that tanners have been working in less hides. Had tanners had as much glue stock as in busy times its value would necessarily have been materially reduced by reason of the dull glue trade. As it is, good lots of stock have been readily taken at last year's prices. The poorer quality of stock has not held up so well, and as the active manufacturing season neared its close it has been rather difficult to sell dry stock except at concessions.

Glue makers have found the demand to be for the cheaper grades. Hide glues have ranged from 12 to 25 cents per pound, but with only a small proportion selling above 15 to 18 cents, while sales have been made at 11 cents. The better grades of glue have not changed in prices, materially, and the small profits of the year are chiefly derived from this branch of production. The cost of stock has, however, worked down margins here as in case of the poorer grades.

Foreign competition has been as strong as ever, and is not confined so largely to the lower grades as heretofore. The domestic competition is very sharp. Small manufacturers producing not over 200 barrels a year, seem to make the market fully as much as the large concerns, and have generally disposed of their product at figures which cannot pay expenses. This may not be done deliberately, but it is done nevertheless. Many manufacturers are not able to tell what their manufactured glue costs them until they close the season. Some of the experienced heads say that it is almost impossible to reckon to a fine point the cost of any particular lot.

It will be readily seen that this is an element of unsteadiness particularly in such a weak market as the present one. Stocks on hand of all grades are ample. It is estimated that despite the reduced production there are larger stocks on hand than a year ago, although they are not burdensome.

BASE BALL NOTES.

The Peabody High School nine attended the Sons of Veterans picnic at Marblehead last Wednesday, and defeated the Sons of Veterans 4 to 0.

A picked nine, called the Peabody Drug Clerks, played the Lynn lawyers in Lynnfield last Wednesday and defeated them 21 to 5.

Next Saturday the St. John's base ball nine will play a game with a Gloucester club in that city.

The Salem High School base ball nine have withdrawn from the League because they could not get a catcher to suit them.

The Clippers of Danversport and the Actives of this town played base ball last Saturday and the former were defeated 18 to 13.

POINT OF PINES.—The preliminary season commenced at the Point of Pines Sunday, June 14, at which time the "Goodwood" opened its doors to guests. The Hotel Pines will open for the season, June 28. Everything points to a more successful season at this charming resort than ever before. The grounds, cafe, hotels, rink, etc., are all to be under the management of Mr. Charles H. Thayer, and the same liberal arrangements for enjoyment will be continued. A look over the grounds shows active preparations for the crowds of pleasure seekers. One of the most prominent new features will be the roller coaster, or "jolly-go-round," as they are called at Coney Island. It is now nearly completed, and is painted in bright colors. The old skating rink is being rebuilt, and will be partially roofed over, a new floor laid, and will be practically a new rink. The cafe is to be used for dancing, refreshments being served only in the side rooms. One of the small buildings in the rear of the skating rink is to be used for a bowling alley, and the other is to be turned into a boat house. The grounds are to be improved by the addition of a number of swings and tents. The small booths have been repainted, and present a bright appearance.

SUCH MEN AS MRS. HOWE.—The New York Home Journal, in a some what mixed article on Boston's literary folk, says:—

The atmosphere surrounding that part of Beacon street is somewhat conducive to a refined sense of humor, for it is impregnated with the presence of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, whose home is but three doors beyond that of the novelist. In close proximity reside such men as Richard Field, so long manager of the Boston Museum; Dr. George Hayward, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Benjamin Guild, John Quincy Adams, Winthrop Sargent, Francis H. Appleton and Josiah G. Abbott.—Record.

Standing advertisements in a paper command confidence. The man who for a year resides in a community and lives a reputable life, be he of moderate ability, will grow in confidence and esteem of his fellows. On the same principle a newspaper advertisement becomes familiar to the eyes of the reader. It may be seldom read, still it makes the columns of a paper and inspires confidence in the ability of the advertiser.

FROM THE SPIRIT WORLD.

The Banner of Light, the authorized organ of the Spiritualists, in its issue of May 30, published the following "spirit message," given through the mediumship of Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Will it be said "Strange that he should come in such a way?" If so, I will answer; No; not strange, for I ever sought to know the truth, and when I had got what I knew was the truth, I wished to impart it to others; I did not want to keep it exclusively in my own mind. And now that I know that I can come into loving association with dear ones of earth: know that tender ties have not been severed, but only drawn closer around my heart, why should I not reveal this knowledge to those who are dear to me?

No; it is not strange that I come, though I am obliged to make use of a public avenue, for I know of no private way which will afford me the opportunity of reaching directly those whom I desire to meet.

I have not long been an inhabitant of the higher realms. I am like a young student just entering upon the boundaries of knowledge, looking forward to the acquirement of learning, and yet trembling because of the vast responsibilities just opening before him. I feel that I have just acquired the first rudiments of a spiritual education, and that I have many things yet to learn. And how can I speak to you concerning those things of the heavenly life, of which I am almost ignorant.

Some of my friends might say: "Oh! he has passed through death; he has overcome its mystery; if he can speak at all he must certainly be able to reveal something of the grandeur of the eternal life." But when one passes from the darkness of midnight, so to speak, into the splendor of an August noon, he is so dazzled by the light and the brilliancy around him that he cannot take note of especial objects, and for a time must wait until his vision grows stronger and his nerves become invigorated. I am like such an individual. I am bewildered at the strangeness of my surroundings.

I have found a natural life, more so than I anticipated—and this is one thing that is strange to me—I have also met kindly friends who have given me greeting and introduced me into courts where I have encountered many an old associate—and this also bewilders me. I have pleasant surroundings, but they are so unfamiliar that I hardly dare trust myself to describe them.

And yet with all my feebleness and inability to adequately depict my spiritual condition, I am here to speak to my friends, because I wish to raise my voice, as one from the dead—calling to them from beyond the tomb—and announce my continued life, my ability to return to watch over their affairs and I trust to guide them forward in their future lives.

And thus I come, bringing love and greeting to the dear ones of my family—I will not say I had, for I feel that I still have a family of noble children and a dear companion, who are to me like the lovely flowers of the summer time, giving me beauty and fragrance and sweetness for the enrichment of my soul. And to those dear ones I bring my heart's best love.

Not only I have these to reach, but old friends, lifelong associates, companions who have grown into my life, and who, I think, miss me from the old walks. To one and all I bring greeting.

You will pardon me, Mr. Chairman, if I seem a little strange; you will understand that this is a new course of procedure to me. My voice has often been heard in the halls of jurisdiction; I have filled places of public trust, and I was accustomed to facing many strange positions and many individuals, but this is something altogether different from what I have been used to, and I am a little confused.

Will it be necessary for identification or any other purpose for me to say that for many years I was the Court Clerk of the County of Essex; that I was also District Attorney for that county; that I was a member of the bar, and—but I think that will be sufficient. I do not care to proclaim my public life on earth—let it speak for itself.

I only wish to draw the attention of my friends to this life of the spirit apart from the material, so wonderful, so sublime, so significant to the soul that longs and grasps for futurity, hoping to unfold in its countless stages the power and vigor of mind which it feels pulsating within, which it has been unable fully to express in its limited condition of earth.

I will say that Gen. Sutton desires me to convey his regards, his greetings, and the loving expressions of a faithful heart to those on earth who are dear to him. He has kindly assisted me in my researches in the spiritual life, and I anticipate aid from him in my future studies.

I may say I was a lifelong resident of Peabody, Mass., not a native; I might almost have been considered one, for I claim that as my home. As a physician, in coming to you, would call himself Doctor so and so, because without his title friends would say, "Oh! he never would come in that manner," I shall be obliged to call myself Hon. A. A. Abbott.

Arranging for a complete transformation of their business, Messrs. Almy, Bigelow & Washburn are offering radical bargains throughout the vast line of the varieties in their stock. Remnants of dress goods; great values in summer silks, of which only one dress can be sold to a person; with unprecedented reductions in other lines, are advertised to-day. Little Breeches.

I don't go much on religion,
I aint never had no show,
But I keep a middler tight grip sir,
On a hand full of things as I know.
I don't pan out on the prophets,
The freewill, and that sort of thing,
But I believe in God and the angels
Ever since one night last spring.

I come into town with some turnips,
And little Gabe he came along,
No four year old in the country,
Could beat him for pretty and strong,
Pert, chipper and sassy,
Always ready to sneer and to fight,
And I larned him chaw tobacco,
Just to keep his milk teeth white.

The snow came down like a blanket,
As I stopped at Tagget's store,
I went in for a jug of molasses,
And left the team at the door,
They scared at something and started,
I heard one little squall,
And hell-to-split over the prairie,
Went team, Little Breeches and all.

Hell-to-split over the prairie—
I was nearly froze with scare,
But we rousted out some torches,
And searched for 'em far and near.
At last we found horses and wagon,
Snowed under a soft white mound,
Upset, dead beat, but of little Gabe,
No hide or hair could be found.

Here all hope soured on me,
Of my fellow critters aid,
So I just flopped down on my marrow bone,
Crotch deep in the snow and prayed.
By this time the torches were played out,
And me and Israel Parr,
Went off for some wood to a sheep fold,
That he said was some where there.

We found it at last and a little shed,
Where they shut up the lambs at night,
We looked in and saw them cuddled there,
So warm, so sleepy and white,
And there sat Little Breeches and chirped
As pert as ever you see,
I want a chaw of tobacco
An' that's what's the matter of me.

How did he get there—Angels?
He never could have walked in that storm,
So they just scooped down and toted him,
To where it was safe and warm.
And I think that saving a little child
And bringing him back to his own
Was a great sight better business,
Then loafing about a throne.

STARR CROSS.

Would You Kiss Me Again?

[The following exquisite poem was written in 1867, when the author was a young lady under twenty. Whittier, the poet, wrote of it, and its young author, that she had truly mastered the secret of English verse:]

You kissed me! my head
Dropped low on your breast,
With a feeling of shelter
And infinite rest;
While the holy emotions
My tongue dare not speak
Flashed up in a flame
From my heart to my cheek.
Your arms held me fast—
Oh, your arms were so bold!
Heart beat against heart
In your passionate fold.
Your glances seemed drawing
My soul through my eyes,
As the sun draws the mist
From the seas to the skies.
Your lips clung to mine
Till I prayed in bliss
They might never unclasp
From the rapturous kiss.

You kissed me! my heart
And my breath and my will,
In delirious joy,
For a moment stood still.
Life had for me then
No temptations, no charms,
No vision of happiness
Outside of your arms,
And were I this instant
An angel, possessed
Of the peace and the joys
That are given the blest,
I would fling my white robes
Unrepentingly down,
I would tear from my forehead
Its beautiful crown,
To nestle once more,
In that haven of rest,
Your lips upon mine,
My head on your breast!

You kissed me! my soul
In a bliss so divine
Reeled and swooned like a drunken man
Foolish with wine;
And I thought 'twere delicious
To die there, if death
Would but come while my lips
Were yet moist with your breath;
If my heart might grow cold
While your arms clasped me round,
In their passionate fold.
And these are the questions
I ask day and night;
Must my lips taste no more
Such exquisite delight?
Would you care if my breast
Were my shelter as then,
And if you were here,
Would you kiss me again?

The warm weather often has a depressing and debilitating effect. Hood's Sarsaparilla overcomes all languor and lassitude.

Selected Story.

MME. STEPHANIE.

Algy Talbot, after much weary lodging-hunting, found rooms to suit him at last in South Audley street. Not an important circumstance, apparently, for the rooms were but required pro tem., while his family mansion in Grosvenor Square underwent redecorating; yet the fact was destined to affect his whole after career.

"A lucky fellow, Algy!" was the constant comment of his friends, and they numbered many of both sexes. His luck consisted of his good looks, his popularity, his unfailing spirits, and, last but not least, his immense wealth.

But there was a crumpled leaf even in his luxurious couch of roses, though he kept his trouble to himself, and hid his sorrow beneath the mask of gayety.

"That lovely house ought to have a mistress," a frisky matron said to him one day, though in truth it was the last thing she wished to see come to pass.

Algy laughed the matter off with a merry retort, and believed implicitly that, at the mature age of three-and-thirty, he and love had bade adieu to each other for evermore.

"I've been hard hit once," he said to himself; "I shan't run the risk again;" and he sighed a little regretfully as he shaved his firm rounded chin, and let his eyes wander sadly across the street to the empty house that faced him. The blank windows began to appear as the emblem of his own life, the vacant rooms served but to remind him of his own untenanted heart.

One day, to his great joy, the bill opposite was taken down, and the premises handed over to the workmen. He found himself almost unconsciously watching the progress of their labor and hazarded an idle conjecture as to the future owner; while yet his own house was in a state of paint and whitewash, this dainty little abode was complete in its freshness. The wooden door had been replaced by a glass one, across the panes of which Madras muslin was closely gathered in delicate folds. The one large window was draped with curtains of eastern stuff, cunningly parted to reveal large palms in blue pots. The house, from its outward appearance, might have been the pretty nest of a pair of turtle doves but for the two words, "Mme. Stephanie," which glittered in large gold letters over the door. Only those two words. Nothing to enlighten the passing crowd as to the nature of the trade and occupation of this mysterious individual.

But that Mme. Stephanie was not altogether unknown was speedily manifested by the string of carriages so constantly standing before her door. Algy became interested, in spite of himself—nay, more, absolutely curious. He longed to part those tantalizing curtains, and take a searching glance at the room so artfully hidden from the range even of his opera glasses. His interest was still further excited by the daily appearance of one female form so enveloped in a long mantle that no trace of figure could be distinguishable, while thick veil covered the face. That this woman came every morning at 11, and issued forth again at 6, speedily convinced him that she was graceful, and the plaits of golden hair peeping from beneath the simple black bonnet, revealed that she was young. He began to conjecture of the face so persistently hidden, and even to long with surprising fervor for a glimpse of the beauty he felt certain was concealed.

One evening he sauntered to and fro before the house at the hour he knew she was likely to take her departure. His heart beat fast as the door opened and the well-known figure issued forth. Her garment almost touched him as she approached, but, at the same moment, another form appeared in the distance, and a shrill voice exclaimed: "Ah, Mme. Stephanie, mille pardons, mais ——"

Mme. Stephanie turned and re-entered the shop. Algy had never connected this mysterious daily visitor with the gold letters, and the truth was a revelation to him. He strolled to and fro, meditatively, awaiting her second advent, and then deliberately followed her across Grosvenor square. He saw her glance up at the scaffolding before his own house, and fancied he heard a sigh. Was she aware he was following her? He could not tell. She neither slackened nor increased her pace, but suddenly hailed a passing hansom and jumped in. He failed to hear the given direction, and there was not another hansom in sight; so, with a sigh of disappointment, he abandoned his search and returned to his lodgings. To-morrow he would try again; the shop could not disappear in the night, neither could Stephanie neglect her business.

But many days elapsed before he saw again the well-known form, and he grew impatient at the frustration of his desires. He marveled at his own keenness in the matter, but could not shake off the haunting memory of the golden hair and graceful figure. At last he discovered by chance that Mme. Stephanie had altered her hours of entrance and exit. He had risen early to join some friends in a country expedition, when, glancing from his window, he saw the familiar form gliding in at the shop door. In a moment his resolve was taken. Sending off a hasty line of excuse to his expectant friends, he sat down to await a more conventional hour in which to pay the opposite abode a visit. Penetrate that sanctum he would, and, if possible see Mme. Stephanie face to face, free from all disguise. Satisfied by an untiring watch that she had not left the premises, he sauntered across about 3 o'clock, and boldly opened the sacred door. He found himself in what appeared at first more like a lady's boudoir than a shop; matting and Persian rugs beneath his feet, luxurious sofas and easy chairs, flowers and plants in abundance: some chests of drawers of excellent marqueterie, and scattered about on chairs and tables some silken garments of delicate tints. A few bonnets on stands, lace wraps, fans and perfumery, evidently formed the whole of Mme. Stephanie's stock in trade.

A Frenchwoman, whose shrill tones he instantly remembered, came forward, and, in broken English, sought to discover monsieur's wishes. Algy, not one bit disconcerted, declared that his mission could only be fulfilled by Mme. Stephanie herself; upon which the forewoman parted some heavy curtains at the further end of the shop, and disclosed a tiny apartment, in which madame was seated at her writing table. She laid down her pen and rose instantly, but, at the first glance at the approaching figure, she started and would have shrunk back into the shade, but that Algy had already caught a glimpse of that pale, agitated face, and with a bound forward seized her hand.

"Mrs. Molyneux—you."

"Yes, I," she answered, striving to smile. "Only please call me Mrs. Stephanie, and remember that you are my customer."

"I cannot understand this mystery," broke in Algy, eagerly. "To think it should have been you all this time who have interested me, and that I never guessed the truth!"

"Alas for man's power of penetration! But please go now; that good woman yonder is astonished, as well she may be. I will be merciful, and let you off a purchase this time, for I suspect curiosity and not any of my wares, tempted you hither. But should you dare to repeat the offense, my most expensive article shall be forced upon you."

"I must see you; I must speak to you. Do you think I shall be satisfied with this half glimpse? There is so much I must hear."

Mme. Stephanie reflected a moment. "What must be, must," she replied, half smiling. "Well, I will meet you at Stanhope Gate at 6 o'clock, when my business hours are over. Does that satisfy you."

"Perfectly. But you will be sure and come?"

"I will. But please go now." And so, without further demur, he went, overwhelmed with astonishment, love and incredulity.

Three years before, Mrs. Molyneux had been the acknowledged belle of the season; even royalty had, to a remarkable extent, worshipped at her shrine, and poor Algy's heart was not the only one laid at her feet. But Mrs. Molyneux was as cold as she was beautiful; she accepted homage, but it awoke no answering passion in her breast, and she speedily gained for herself the soubriquet of "The Ice Queen." Her husband was small, dark and ugly, with a violent temper, and but two passions—gambling and drink. Surely, society said, it was not for his sake that she remained so impervious to adoration! It is hard now-a-days for society to accredit any one with pride and purity. The Ice Queen had her reign—then came the fatal crash. The pretty house in Park lane was sold, and crowds went to see what the famous beauty had collected about her, and bought her furniture at fabulous prices, and charitably annexed their own stories to each table and chair. The Molyneux disappeared. Society saw them no more. Report said he was in a mad house and his wife living abroad; but nothing was known for a certainty. Other beauties sprang up, less proud and cold, to take the absent one's place, and the Molyneux were speedily forgotten. Algy alone remembered always. He had loved the more because his passion had been gently but firmly repulsed. He acknowledged and worshipped the purity, even while he swore fiercely against the coldness that forbade his love. It was with a beating heart that he awaited his queen, and went to meet her at the first glimpse of the stately figure moving toward him across the grass.

"Have you yet got over the shock of finding your old acquaintance has turned saleswoman?" she asked, half playfully, as they turned and walked slowly side by side. "Well, I always flattered myself I had excellent taste, and I am turning it now to good account, am I not? Besides, labor is honest, and to feel honest is a delightful sensation."

"Do not jest," exclaimed Algy, impatiently. "Tell me all that has passed since we last met. Why are you here and alone? Are you free——"

She put up her hand and stopped him.

"My husband is alive, but I would rather not speak of him. It is enough we are parted. I could not go into all the details that led me to take the step I have in thus hiding from him. Life with him became impossible. Every womanly feeling was outraged whilst I remained by his side. Existence was a hideous nightmare; I could not be his dupe, his decoy duck—my whole soul revolted from such a career; I left him to his own devices, and became what you see—Madame Stephanie."

"Why did you ever marry him?" exclaimed Algy bitterly.

"Ah, that is a long story. I and my mother were alone in the world. She was old, we were poor. Mr. Molyneux was rich, he would give my mother a home. Moreover, he was madly in love with me. I was young and inexperienced. I acted for the best, and God knows honestly carried out my part of the bargain. My marriage unfortunately benefited my mother but little, for she died soon after. Then Lady —— took me up. Society discovered I was a beauty, and my husband's ambition was gratified. Ah! few guessed how beneath the rich dresses and jewels the heart was weary and sad. Situated as I was, neither man nor woman could help me. Love I was not free to give, friendship I soon learnt was but a name. I was the fashion; my master was satisfied. He encouraged me in every extravagance; then upbraided me when I learnt the truth, that his wealth was but a fable, and my admirers were expected to pay my bills. There was one terrible scene between us; then came the sale. I compelled him to take me abroad, for I still hoped, away from the world, out of the false position in which I had been placed, something like peace might at least be ours. Alas, the dream was vain! One day I learned that the very means on which we subsisted were procured from a rich woman separated from her husband; then I fled. I went to Paris, to a friend of my childhood. It was with her the idea of a shop first originated. I took a few lessons in bonnet-making, engaged a competent forewoman, sold my little remaining jewelry, and took the shop. Thank God, I am doing well, and trust to realize a profit by the end of the year."

"Impossible!" exclaimed Algy. "Oh, my darling, you cannot continue in this life. Let me at least have the consolation of procuring your comforts. Give me permission to win your love."

He saw her tremble, but she remained silent, then turned to him with tears in her eyes.

"It is because you have won my love that what you wish could never be," she said simply.

Algy's heart beat fast with rapture, but when he would have spoken she held up her hand. "I have guarded my honor safely. It is my one valuable possession in life; do not seek to take it from me. The world has misunderstood me often, but the inner consciousness of my own integrity has made me callous to its base opinion."

"How can I resist such an appeal?" said Algy disconsolately. "Friends, at least, we may be?"

She shook her head. "Let me go my way, and you go yours. I am placed so that no one can help me. My one fear in life is lest my husband should discover my retreat. Only yesterday he passed my window driven by that woman in her phaeton."

"He is in London, then?"

"Apparently. But possibly only en passant. I hope so. I should breathe freer did I know he were gone."

"I will ascertain and let you know," said Algy eagerly.

They passed out of the gates and wended their way back to South Audley street. As they turned into it they saw a large crowd collected and heard the sound of many excited voices.

"What is it?" said Mme. Stephanie, half nervously, and pressing closer to her companion's side.

"Some accident, I fear," he answered quickly. "Do you stand here, and let me go forward alone to see. You will not be afraid?"

Her face was very pale as she raised it to his; but her voice was steady as she replied, "No, I will wait here."

In a second Algy was in the midst of the throng eagerly interrogating. The truth was speedily poured into his ears. There had been a collision—a lady's phaeton upturned. The lady was but slightly injured. Her companion was dead. His head had struck the curbstone, and death had been instantaneous.

Algy turned his eyes toward the dead man with a strange conviction of the truth even before the dead man's face was visible to him. His queen had nothing more to fear. Her rightful owner lay dead at his feet.

An Astonishing Story.

A dog belonging to the B—s, which was a great favorite of theirs and regarded as of thoroughly irreproachable training, was charged by some of their neighbors with worrying sheep at night. The family rebutted this charge on the ground that the dog was fastened into their kitchen at night and was never let out until the servants came down in the morning.

The farmers, however, persisted that they knew the dog so well and had seen him going from the sheepfold, though he had managed to escape them. When this was urged so strongly as to make it imperative on the B—s to take some further steps, one of the daughters volunteered to sleep in the kitchen and watch the dog's behavior.

When they made up the young lady's bed the dog seemed very restless and strange, but by and by he settled down and all was silent.

A little after midnight he got up, came to the bed, and sniffed about until he had satisfied himself that the lady was not awake. Then he leaped into the window-seat, lifted the catch of the shutters, and opened them. Then he undid the latch of the window, which he opened, and then disappeared.

After a long interval he came back, closed and fastened the windows and shutters, and finished by licking his own feet and the marks which he had left by springing on the floor. To the terror of the seeming sleeper he now came and closely scrutinized her; but she kept still, and he at last crept off to his own bed.

As soon as she heard the servants stirring the lady rose softly and slipped through the door. But the guilty dog had marked her. He sprang up and made a dash at her with undisguised fury, for he saw that his secret was discovered and his character blasted by one whom he now regarded as a hateful spy.

Fortunately, she got the door fast just in time, and at once alarmed the house. But the dog was now so furious that no one dared go into the kitchen, and at last a gun was brought, pointed through an aperture, and he was shot dead.—From "Petland Revisited."

Another Champion Mean Man.

A Montreal physician takes the palm for sheer, clear, unadulterated meanness. He took into his employ last fall a young man named Ezra Tilton, a hard-working, deserving young man, who went into service in the hopes of being able to save up enough during the winter to purchase a horse and cab, it being his ambition to become a cabman. Several times during the winter the doctor said to Ezra: "You are sick." "No," he would reply, "I'm very well," but the doctor would insist that he was sick, and induce him to take some medicine. It also happened, in the natural course of events, that Ezra occasionally broke a household implement of some sort. When spring came Ezra went to his employer and said: "I have not drawn any money during the winter, sir, because I thought it was just as safe in your hands as it would be anywhere. I'll take it now, sir, if you please." "Well," said the doctor, producing a memorandum book, "I find that you owe me —— dollars for attendance, —— for medicine, and —— for breakage. There is $1.50 coming to me, but I'll make you a present of it."

At a small French village named Auberine, in the Department of Isere, lives a woman named Maria Durand, whose age is said to be 128 years. What is claimed to be a certificate of her baptism declares that she was born March 16, 1761. She belongs to the peasant class and lives on public charity. She has been a widow for 96 years, and is therefore probably the oldest widow of which there exists a record.

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter—which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils for throat, and frequently by both channel.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individualat different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing, and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of a notable size, on which traces of blood mayat times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant sniffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertions. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical for mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, toss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lighthill to decide on the first examination as to the cureability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of and [illegible] of the Nervous system from whatever cause.

Newspaper Men's Work.

A POPULAR VIEW OF THE DUTIES CATEGORICALLY EXPRESSED.

Does the editor write everything in the paper?

Oh, yes. He writes the love story on the outside in the morning, then five or six editorials, and double as many paragraphs, then the theatre notices and advertising puffs, in the afternoon he helps the compositors, or goes down stairs and works the press, or assists the boys to fold the papers.

Should a newspaper man always be a printer?

Oh, yes; always. You must learn to set type before you can write at all. Shakespeare, Byron, Lord Bacon, Tennyson and all the rest were printers. You cannot expect to be a good compositor unless you are a printer.

What does the managing editor do?

He keeps the pens and inkstands clean, and manages to mark a great deal of writing with a blue pencil What he marks goes into the—paper—basket, and is often anxiously looked for several weeks after by the correspondent. He is the man who loves to talk with you when you have an hour or two to spare, and can talk to him, and takes it very hard if you don't stay at least half an hour after you have finished your business with him—to say it all over again.

What is the business of the proof-reader?

Oh, he is simply hired to prove the truth of whatever the editor writes.

And what does the exchange reader do?

Oh, he simply exchanges news with other papers.

And what does the night editor do?

Oh, he simply watches the compositors at night to see that they do not shirk their work or steal any type.

Is it really necessary to go abroad to be a good foreign correspondent?

Oh, no. You can be just as bad a foreign correspondent at home as anywhere else.

What kind of writers do editors prefer?

Oh, people who have great command of language, or rather those who are greatly commanded by language, and who can say the same thing three or four times over in the same sentence; also young ladies three months out of the High School with poetry on "Spring," if Spring is in season. Also men with but one idea in their heads who have been studying it all their lives, and who have got it all down on three or four reams of paper.

Can anybody write for a newspaper?

Oh, yes; they can if they want to. There is nothing to stop anybody from writing for a newspaper.

And get paid for it?

Oh, yes. There is nothing to stop anybody from being paid for writing for a newspaper.

What is the best subject to write about for a newspaper?

Oh, anything which happens to interest you. If it interests you it is a sure sign it will interest everybody else.

How does an editor like to have an article commence?

Commonly in this way: 'having a few moments to spare, I have dashed off these few lines in the hopes that what I have ground out may interest your readers. I have not said on this subject all I could or all I can, but if it should prove interesting, as I hope it will, I trust I shall be able to say more on this and other topics, etc., etc. The longer you can keep on in this strain the more will the editor be delighted with your article.

In what style does he like to have it written?

He likes to have it written in a very fine, obscure hand, with lots of interlineations and letters sprawled across each other, and, if possible, on both sides of the paper; and then you should call for a proof of your article, and, when you get it, conclude to strike out every third sentence and put another in its place, and when you get a "revise" you might rewrite the entire article over again. This will make the entire office happy and cheerful.

What will the editor do first after looking over such an article?

He will order a new club—for you when you call.

Where do you generally put the long articles?

In the waste basket.

Do you pay for them?

No, but the old junk man does at the rate of a cent a pound. There is a good opening to make some money writing long articles providing you live long enough.

Should one learn shorthand to make a good reporter.

Oh, yes. By all means. Then you will be sure not to lose an item if you report a fire. Or if you go to a temperance meeting you won't lose a word the speakers say. Editors are very particular that every word of a speaker (particularly temperance speakers) should go into the paper. The reporter who brings in the longest reports has his salary raised every week, and an order for a new suit of clothes once a month

What does the financial editor do?

Generally he talks most of what he has least on hand—cash, and after talking a column of grand cash, eats a 15-cent lunch and wonders where his new Spring overcoat is to come from.

What is the business of the scientific editor?

He smokes the glasses that we see the eclipses through, and at times and places takes observations through other glasses.

What is the duty of the dramatic editor?

To get $100 from a theatre manager every time he writes a favorable notice of a new play.

What idea is born into the world with nine men out of ten?

That they can successfully write for and run a newspaper.

Where do most of them take this idea?

Out of the world with them.

The Detroit Free Press tells how father and son compromised on the circus question:

"No, my son," he replied, as he put on his hat, "You can't go to the circus." "But why, father?" "Well, in the first place, I can't fool away my money on such things." "Yes, but I have enough of my own." "And in the next place, it is a rough crowd, the sentiment is unhealthy, and no respectable person can countenance such things." "But, fath—' "That's enough, sir! You can't go. I want you to enjoy yourself, but you must seek some more respectable amusement." An hour later a curious thing happened in the circus tent A boy climbed to the top flight of seats and sat down beside a man who had just finished a glass of lemonade and was lighting a cigar. He had his plug hat on the back of his head, and seemed to be enjoying himself hugely. It was father and son. The father had gone straight to the grounds from dinner, and the boy had run away. They looked at each other for half a minute, and then the boy got in the first blow by whispering: "Say, dad, if you won't lick me I won't tell ma you was here!" The father nodded his head to the agreement, and the great spectular parade in the ring began.

HE BOOMED TOO HARD.—A Detroit firm employed a new collector a few days ago, and among other bills he was given one which had long been classed under the head of "doubtful." He was informed that the chances of his getting anything were extremely dubious, but was promised half of all he could collect.

In two hours after starting out he was back with the money on the doubtful bill, and when asked how he succeeded so well he replied: "After getting into his office I locked the door, pocketed the key, and told him he'd either got to come down or I'd break every bone in his body. He shelled out, and both of us are $10 ahead."

The next day the firm paid $75 to settle a case of "extorting money by threats of violence," and the collector was kindly informed that he could have a long vacation for the benefit of his health.

WHAT PARENTS FEAR.—Many persons, especially parents, object to many quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's Tonic does not involve this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor.

"An ounce of prevention worth a pound of cure," is an old adage but true. In view of predictions that this country is liable to be visited by more than an ordinary amount of contagious diseases this year, it behooves all to inquire about and practice every sanitary measure, especially cleanliness, which, as a preventative, offers one some means of escape at least; and in this how important the article of Soap as to quality fit for use; certainly inferior grades, made so by foreign substances and adulterations of a questionable character, should be rejected, that there may be no taint left on the person or clothes which might in any way invite the germs of these various diseases. A first-class article, made by known reliable manufacturers, is the only kind that can be safely used or recommended. In the use of a standard soap, like the "Welcome," made by Curtis Davis & Co., there can be no risk, being the goods of a firm whose name on soap is a sufficient guarantee of its purity.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,

Editors and Publishers.

WE SUGGESTED a few weeks since, that a tenable article might be written against an exhibition of the graduating class of our High School such as was held last week. This is not our present purpose, but to call attention to some criticisms which we have heard in different quarters, regarding the exercises last Thursday — uncalled for as far as it related either to the teachers or scholars themselves, and unjust inasmuch as it assumed that these closing exercises are a test of the work of the scholar.

Graduation day in our High School is no different from that in other institutions. It is a gala day for the class. Its exercises here are by permission and under the authority of the School Board, and under the direction of the teachers. Each of the graduates takes some part; either by an original essay, a declamation or a reading. But it is in no sense to be considered as a test of the work of the school, or the ability of either teachers or scholars. At the examination the day previous, an opportunity is given the public to judge of the progress of the school—an opportunity which few avail themselves of. We have noted this several times, but it is necessary to keep it in mind because criticism of the graduating exercises, which may possibly be called for at certain times, is apt to be considered by the general public as a criticism of the school itself. There are plenty of people always ready to condemn the High School, and because a certain scholar has not voice enough to be heard in a hall seating 1500 people, it is very far from an indication that the students in our High School have been without progress in their studies, or that the teachers have been dilatory in their duties. The test of this, as we have said, is in the examination of the previous day.

Three things have been found fault with in last Thursday's exhibition—inability to hear the scholars, the length of the exercises, and the lack of merit in the original essays. We have carefully read the different productions as published by us in full last week, and we fail to see wherein they are below the average to be expected from scholars of such an age, and one or two of them are worthy of much commendation.

In regard to delivery we should have large charity for the scholars. Usually it is their first appearance before the public—certainly before so large an audience as was gathered last week. They are not practiced orators. Neither is there devoted so long a time to preparation as by some people is supposed. Most of the rehearsals take place after school hours, and while it is certainly pleasant to be able to understand everything said on such an occasion, there are some reasons why it could not be expected last week.

It is painfully evident that the large Town Hall is a failure in regard to its acoustic properties. When members of a first class combination, such as Margaret Mather and J. M. Hill's company, are unable to be heard distinctly—people who play night after night in larger halls even than our own, what is to be expected of those who make their first bow to the public? When members of this same company are posted previously as to the difficulty, and take extra care to make themselves intelligible to their auditors, yet find so much echo to their voices on the stage as to almost lose their cues in a familiar piece, is it any wonder that with crying infants and many of the audience coming and going to and from the hall, there was difficulty in hearing the young graduates?

As to the length of the exercises that can be remedied, and should be. Not that the essays were too long, in themselves. There were too many of them, and too much other business. At the graduating exercises of our colleges it is not expected that all the graduates should take part. Many of them are excused, and in these exercises the programme could be cut one half and be just as satisfactory to the scholars and teachers, and more so to the public.

Leaves from the Editor's Note Book.

WASHINGTON.

Entering Washington by the Baltimore and Potomac railroad we arrive at the depot in which President Garfield was shot on that memorable July morning in 1882. With uncovered head we stand over a metal star placed in the floor to mark the spot where he fell, and from there, turn our eyes to the wall directly above, where a marble tablet placed there as a memorial to the martyred President, by the railroad company commemorated that sad event in our history. We will not attempt to discribe this beautiful city, which has been visited by most of our readers, and whose public buildings and elegant residences have been made the subject of many a newspaper article and filled many an artist's sketch book. And hundreds of our readers, like ourselves, have found themselves puzzled over its streets, which are laid out exactly parallel with the meridian, or at right angles with it, with the exception of its broad avenues which intersect the others in a diagonal direction, and are named for the fifteen States which composed the Union when the city was laid out. We will be content with making a few observations on the things that strike a stranger pleasantly and otherwise. The city has over ninety miles of concrete and asphalt paving, and endless numbers of shade trees. It is estimated that there are 125 miles of this kind of shade outside of the parks, and of maple trees alone, there are over 25,000. We were told that great care is taken with the trees. In planting them first, three cart loads of dirt are removed to make the hole, the tree put in and three cart loads of good soil prepared and enriched for the purpose, is put around it. The bringing of this soil costs fifty cents a load, and the average cost is about three dollars a tree. The first point of interest is the Capitol, which contains the halls of the national legislature, etc., beside the old French lady, whose winning smile has welcomed visitors for the past thirty years and whose “pile” has constantly grown larger, as each visitor purchases some souvenir to take home. She is as much a fixture of the place as the guide, who is willing to show you all over the building, explaining everything, and trusting to your generosity to help him earn a fair day's pay. Standing upon the dome of the Capitol, one overlooks a vast territory. In one direction, are magnificent avenues where fashion takes its daily airing, and in another is the squalid and unimportant part of the city, where the negro and the poor man seek a shelter, but where the deadly malaria of the river, finds an easy victim. And there so close together stand wealth and poverty, forming a striking picture. The stranger is well accommodated in Washington, as there are numerous lines of street cars and herdics besides all kinds of public conveyances. There is one line of cars which charge a fare of two cents, another that charges three cents and a third that charges five cents, and the herdics also charge five cents and hold about eight persons. No matter which direction you go, if you keep in the car, you will reach Pennsylvania Avenue. This avenue is to the city, what Heaven is to the churches, the centre aimed at, and no matter by which route you travel, you are bound to reach the avenue.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

While we did not intend to speak of any particular one of the many public attractions, we cannot refrain from jotting down our opinion of the Washington monument. This gigantic obelisk towering toward the sky, can be seen from any part of the city, and is made from a grayish marble. It is situated on low grounds and there is nothing attractive about it. Sitting on a wood horse, left by the carpenters on the shady side, we gaze around us. On one side is a filthy frog pond and on the other the Potomac flats which are being filled by a patent dredging machine in the river. A short distance away is the Agricultural buildings and the beautiful grounds of the Smithsonian Institute. Around the monument are the old dilapitated buildings in which the work on the stone for the monument has been done, with pieces of stone and yellow mud in all directions. There are two distinct shades to the stone work, one marking the progress made till work was abandoned in 1854, and the other the new part recently completed. Stepping inside the place is cold and damp, and reminds one of the underground cells of some ancient castle, that history tells about. The elevator is out of repair, but there is a pair of stairs, that would make a man shudder to think of ascending them, so frail are they constructed, but even these were not for use during our visit. We contented ourselves by watching the man on guard, who swung a “billy” and lied to us about the beautiful view from the top. He went so far as to present the “Judge” of our party with what he called a piece of the capstone, but what proved to be after we got back to the hotel, a piece of oyster shell. In an adjoining building is kept all the tablets and stones designed for the monument and presented by people, societies and cities in all parts of the world, most of them bearing date 1852. These are in a fair state of preservation, but some with the most beautiful carvings have been defaced. The proper thing to do when visiting this place, is to take away with you pieces chipped from the marble before it was put in place, which is scattered in every direction, and tons of which is carried off annually by visitors. We took a large number of pieces for friends, thinking they would appreciate it, make up a purse and send us to Europe, but we have not heard from them yet.

THE ARMY MEDICAL MUSEUM.

Old Ford's theatre in which President Lincoln was shot, and the house opposite are still objects of great interest. The theatre building has been turned into a medical museum, and here are kept every part of a human being preserved in spirits. Among other things arranged in jars like preserves on a shelf is the spleen of Giteau, and a piece of the vertebrae of the neck of Booth. As you enter there are three striking busts to the left, the center one is Giteau, and on either side of him a monkey, and across the room it is hard to tell them apart.

THE WHITE HOUSE, ETC.

Every true American expresses a feeling of disappointment the first time he visits the White House. After visiting the numerous palatial buildings owned by the government from the Capitol down, and also the beautiful private residences about the city, the contrast between them is so great that the White House seems quite inferior. It is old fashioned and even inside its furnishings and decorations will not compare favorably with many of our first class hotels. The grounds are attractively laid out but are not as fine as many private residences.

After a visit to the White House we went over to the Treasury building, and after visiting the cash room and vaults we called at the appointing clerk's office, Mr. Higgins. Not to make an application for office, but of course to use our influence for a friend. We entered a neatly furnished room in which were several desks, and waited our turn to see the man who receives the different applications for office. He is slightly built of medium heighth with a bald head and full beard, very polite, but greatly overworked. He is waited upon by rather an ancient darkey who limped around as leisurely as if he had plenty of time and there was not twenty individuals, male and female, with anxious faces waiting to have a word with the general appointing clerk. Each one is taken in turn behind a screen, like that of a photographers, in one corner of the room and his application is received, or as in most cases he receives assurances that everything is working well and that when he gets the appointment he will be notified, etc. Then he is bowed politely out and the next applicant comes in and states his grievance. Adjoining this room is one in which are employed numerous clerks and where all documents and recommendations are placed on file and are daily referred to. We were told by Mr. Higgins that there was a constant stream of people to see him and that he had not time to even read his mail during office hours, and this was verified by a large number of unopened letters on his table.

There is a standing joke among the hotel men of the ‘European class” to send a stranger to a restaurant, the owner of which has on his card something like the following. “Ex-Chief Cook at the Tuilleries in Paris, and at the White House, Washington. Gust. M. Broche, French Restaurater.” Stopping at the Harris House, (by the way as good a European Hotel as there is in the city) we were an easy victim, particularly as the ex-Cook of President Arthur was only a few doors below us, and we are always hungry. The place is furnished about equal to many of the second class restaurants of Boston, while the price charged is about equal to Young's or the Adams House. There were two young lady waiters, besides “Madame” Broche, who at times made herself useful. Perhaps some of our readers have stopped there, if so, they will remember some dinner as we do ours of Sunday, May 31. First we had soup, and those who have eaten a Washington soup and survived are fortunate. Then we had chowder, this was pieces of pork cut up in soup, then followed mutton stew, this consisted of a half dozen different kinds of meat, which had been cooked till there was no taste to it, and a spiced sauce had been poured over it. The next dish came nearer to a New England one than any, only we did not recognize it under the name of “crabs and cream.” This was good Marblehead codfish minced with milk. The artist of our party sketched this dish on the back of a card and we treasure it very highly as a souvenir. We had been unable to eat anything up to this time, but the next dish touched our heart, it was mutton chops with French fried potatoes and we had hardly begun to “fill up” when everything was removed and we were treated to strawberries and coffee, the former a little water soaked and considerable gritty. Six o'clock next morning found us hunting up a restaurant where the cook had not tickled the palate of a President with crabs and cream made from codfish and where we could get things to our liking.

THE CENTER MARKET.

This grand structure is built of brick with great arched roofs, and occupy a a whole square, there being about 85,000 feet of space for this purpose. The retail department contains nearly 700 stalls, while there is room for 300 wagons outside. These buildings are owned by a stock company, and the stalls rent for from six to fifteen dollars a month. Market days are great days in Washington and on Saturdays, there are such crowds one can hardly elbow himself through. The stalls offer everything conceivable for sale, meats, vegetables, flowers, dry goods, gents' furnishings, live fowl, etc., in fact everything that is required for every day consumption, while between the stalls will be found lunch counters and baker shops. Many of the stalls are kept by women, and a thriving business is being done at all times. Here may be seen side by side making purchases for the day, the fashionably dressed lady with her servant, with a basket on her arm, the fat boarding house keeper with her own big basket and the old negro woman on the lookout for a “cheap piece” for the “ol man”. Outside are hundreds of hucksters and pens of live sheep, calves, and fowl are on every side. There is another interesting feature about market day, it is the large number of negroes who come in “fro ol Virgina,” and they will take a position on the side walks, in the streets or anywhere that they can squat, and men and women will sit there all day in the hot sun, with perhaps only a dozen of eggs or a few quarts of berries, and offer them for sale a few cents cheaper than the price inside. They are a scource of great annoyance to the regular dealers, and they would gladly buy their stock in trade to get rid of them, but so anxious are these poor people to sell and trade with the public, that they will seldom sell to a retailer. The women wear large bandanna hankerchiefs of gorgeous colors, entwined around their heads, and as they solicit every one to buy, there is always a flow of jolly repartee between them. The market is one of the most interesting places in Washington.

The Danvers Bleachery is one of the most important industries in this town and any improvements made there are of general interest. The company have recently purchased the land of the Elijah Upton estate, fronting their building on the South and it will be cleared and a building constructed on the private way, to be used as a store house and for offices. It will be 62 1-2 feet wide, 242 1-2 feet long and two stories high, made from Danvers brick and Concord granite and fire proof in every way. 600,000 bricks will be required and the cost will be about $25,000. About thirty feet of the southerly side of the building fronting on Foster street will be used for offices and will be attractively fitted up. Separating the office from the store house will be a brick fire wall and from this wall to the other end there will be a storage surface two stories high, divided by a fire wall in the centre, about 210x60 feet. An overhead bridge will connect the store room with the packing house in the main building. On the North side is a covered drive way for teams. The plans for this building, as well as the plans of most of the other buildings, were drawn by Mr. J. Howard Fallon, Superintendent of the works. The contract has been awarded to Knowles & Co., of Lawrence, the same party that built the Danvers Asylum. The contractors have sub-let the building of the foundation to Mr. John Linehan and work has already commenced. Chadbourne & Locke of Lawrence, will lay the brick for the contractors. The building will be surrounded by a neat lawn, and add another to the numerous substantial buildings built by this company.

At the Universalist Church last Sunday Children's day was observed. At the morning service the pastor, Rev. F. W. Sprague, preached an appropriate sermon to the young folks and the choir sang music especially arranged for the occasion. The church was beautifully trimmed and showed great taste on the part of those having it in charge. There were as many as twenty pieces besides a profusion of roses, bundles of ferns, mounds of moss, and lots of pond lillies. There were two children christened, Carl E. Goldthwait, son of Charles Goldthwait, and Maud S. Sprague, daughter of the pastor. In the evening there was a very interesting concert by the younger members, at which Miss Annie Orr, a member of the choir, sang “Beautiful Flowers of Spring.” All the recitations by the children were appropriate for the day.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The sudden decease of Dr. J. Frank Tuckerman, of Salem, is an event calling for special mention in this column. He was known and respected by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, either in business relations, or in the social circle. But it is among those who knew him musically—who had become endeared to him by association with his musical enterprises—that his loss will be the most keenly felt. His name was familiar to all musical people in Salem and vicinity. No enterprise of worth or merit in this line failed to find patronage and encouragement from him, and the approval of his judgment and refined taste was considered an augury of success. He was president of the old Academy of Music in Salem in 1854; and the following year was chosen president of the Salem Choral Union, an outgrowth, to a certain extent, of the Academy, and one of the best organizations of its kind ever existing in that city. Of these two societies Mr. Geo. M. Whipple was secretary at the same time. Later he was conductor of a “Mass Club” so called—a club formed to sing masses, and it was under his baton that P. S. Gilmore, the renowned band leader, played in his younger days in Salem. He was also leader of the choir of North Church for many years.

But it is in connection with the choir of Grace Church that his work is best known. He became leader of this choir about the year 1858, and ever since that time the music here has been of an order which could only be congenial to a man of refined sensibility and high musical culture. He was a composer of much of the music rendered at Grace church; other music was arranged by him to suit the requirements of his choir and the church. No choir in this vicinity ever had so valuable and rare a library of music to sing from—the majority of it copied with his own hand and representing the work of years of toil and labor. Yet this was a labor of love. He looked forward to the meeting with his choir as to a meeting of a part of his family. There were no dissensions common to many choirs. All was harmony within—and how else could there be harmony in their songs of worship? At the time Mrs. Ferguson, of this town, joined the choir, the soprano was Mrs. Kemble and the bass Mr. Fabens; since which time, some fourteen years ago, the circle so bound together has never been broken except by death. Seven years ago Mrs. Kemble passed on, and very recently Mr. Fabens, the valued president of the Schubert Club, and now Dr. Tuckerman himself. Of the old choir existing when Mrs. Ferguson joined it, she alone now remains.

With such a choir and such a leader, the music was always good at Grace church. Dr. Tuckerman had a remarkable voice for one of his years. And while the rest of the choir never considered themselves professional soloists, yet from their long association with each other, and the entire harmony existing between them, church music was rendered as it seldom is in the Episcopal church of this country. An ordinary hymn tune, sung by this choir, was worth a long journey to hear.

Of Dr. Tuckerman's kindness to his friends and his large charity to those in need, we have not room to speak. He was possessed of ample means, and was constantly doing little kindnesses to the members of his choir, as well as others. Only last week he drove up to the door of Mrs. Ferguson, who has recently moved into her new house, corner of Tremont and Central streets, bringing her an elegant lamp. A few years ago he had a collection of his hymns and anthems printed in the choicest style at his own expense, and presented them to his friends. They were not published in the ordinary sense, and the possessors of one of these little volumes have a treasure which is of incomparable value. The manuscript which was used by the choir, with this exception, was seldom seen by the outside world.

Miss Carrie B. Steele, daughter of Rev. Dr. Steele, formerly of this town, is a recent graduate of the N. E. Conservatory of Music, and gave an organ recital in Boston last week.

Miss Rose M. Smith of Philadelphia sang Contralto at the Barton Square Church, Salem, last Sunday.

Miss Carrie, daughter of W. P. Clark, the leader of the Universalist choir in this town, sang contralto there last Sunday.

Mrs. Minnie K. French sang contralto at the Unitarian church last Sabbath.

The three remaining members of the choir of Grace Church, Salem, with Miss Addie Pitman contralto, and A. J. Walker, the organist, sang at Dr. Tuckerman's funeral yesterday.

The funeral of Dr. Tuckerman occurred on the 38th anniversary of his marriage.

A. J. Walker the organist of Grace Church, Salem, has been connected with the choir about thirteen years. He and other members of that choir have had offers to go elsewhere at larger salaries, but such was the affection of all for Dr. Tuckerman that they were refused.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Mr. Lewis Brown's horse had a very narrow escape from a serious accident one day last week as he was drawing a load of stone from his ledge. In coming down the hill a short distance from the ledge the horse stumbled and fell, when the load came on to him wedging him between the forward axle and the ground. After considerable difficulty he was finally got out escaping with only a few scratches.

The new arrangement of trains went into effect Monday morning in this town, and those who were not posted "got left" in many ways. The principal change is in the substitution of Skinner's "speed and safety" line at 9.11 A. M. to Boston for Nason's train which used to leave at 9.08. The train from Lawrence leaves here at 8.31 and another one from Lawrence leaves at 11.07 thus giving us two more trains in the forenoon than we have previously had. The 9.11 train over the So. Reading Branch is a great accommodation. It gives our business men ample time to get their mail, and takes them to Haymarket Square in Boston. This will be a popular train, and doubtless revive the travel this way to Boston. The returning trains are nearly the same, except that the old 5.15 train from Boston runs farther east than Salem, and passengers must take the rear cars in Boston as they do on the 4.40 train. But a train leaves the Haymarket Square depot at the same time 5.15 over the So. Reading branch, and very likely the people from Boston will take this train after a little while. All the trains on this branch now run through directly without any shifting or delay at Wakefield.

Mr. Perley King, well known to all our citizens, died at his home on Lowell street, last Thursday evening, after a short illness from dropsy. Mr. King was rather an eccentric character, preferring to enjoy life in his own way, rather than follow in the line of the fashionable world. He was possessed of an ample fortune, a goodly share of which he inherited and to which he has since added. He owned a large quantity of real estate in this and other states. He was generous and always gave liberally to worthy objects, having presented the Old Ladies' Home with nearly $2500 previous to his death, and was always saving and prudent. He was 73 years of age and never married. He was a good citizen and a lover of law and order.

The first man in the vicinity of Salem to raise strawberries and other small fruits for the market was J. Shedd Needham, who, 40 years ago, put out half an acre of Old Virginia and Wood berries, later introducing the Hovey seedling and various other varieties. He has now about two acres of Bidwell, Downing, Sharpless and Crescent berries, and has raised a Sharpless berry 5 3-4 inches in diameter. The forenoon picking goes to the Salem market and the afternoon picking to the Lynn market. He has picked as many as 12,000 boxes in a season. In 1859 he lost 10 acres of plants by the cold weather. In connection with the business he also has a vinegar factory just completed, capable of turning out 500 barrels of pure cider vinegar per year. The Needham homestead was erected in 1665 and the old barn on the place in 1685.

Rev. S. B. Sweetser and wife, of Gloucester, formerly of the Methodist Church, Peabody, have been to Middletown, Conn., where they attended the commencement of Wesleyan University, and Mr. Sweetser read the poem before the alumni. On Sunday they were at Webster, where Mr. Sweetser preached in the Methodist Church, his former charge, and one of the most flourishing societies outside of the large cities.

Remember the auction sale of a part of the estate of the late Isaac Hardy tomorrow. At 3 o'clock the Homestead estate in the rear of Elm street, will be sold and at 3.30 a lot of land measuring 72x 150 and dwelling house on Upton street. At 4 o'clock about 14 acres of grass land on Waters river.

WATER GAS HEARING.

The hearing on the petition of the Peabody Fuel Gas Company for the right to open the streets of this town for pipes, etc., was heard at the Selectmen's room yesterday afternoon. Chairman Southwick read the petition and Frank E. Farnham, Esq., representing the company, told their object and explained their method. He said the question was whether the Selectmen would allow or not a responsible party to introduce into the town about $75,000 worth of taxable property, to supply such of the inhabitants of the town that wished, with light, heat and power. The town would be benefited by this increase in taxable property, and the citizens would also receive a like benefit from use of the gas. Gas companies are about the only monopolists in Massachusetts. Horse car and water companies have competition. The introduction of coal gas was attended with opposition, but gas has proved a great thing for civilization. Water gas was introduced in 1870 by Prof. S. C. Lowe, who was well known as manager of the famous balloons sent up from Arlington Heights during the war. He afterwards made the ice making machines which are in successful operation at the South. Mr. Farnham explained the manufacture of coal gas and said water gas consisted in forcing steam through the heated coals making a different kind of gas which was much cheaper. And the quality of this gas is 29 candle power while the best coal gas is about 19 candles. This gas will be furnished in price from one-third to one-half cheaper than coal gas. It is a blue gas and is not for illuminating purposes, but by the use of naphtha can be made illuminating. It is applied to manufacturing purposes and to run an engine turn on the gas and the engine requires no skill or care. As there are so many engines used in Peabody this gas is quite necessary. Coal gas could be used, but it is too expensive. There is an arrangment recently perfected by which an incandescent light can be used making a pure white light for illuminating. One of the strongest arguments in its favor is that it is put in at our own expense, and the streets are left in as good condition as before. The only opposition is from the coal gas company represented by Mr. Hoag I infer, and in that case it is a question between the people of the town and the Salem Gas Company The company would consist of responsible men who would take all the stock, but the citizens of the town would have an opportunity to take it if they saw fit. This gas has given complete satisfaction in the hundred or more towns where it has been used. By request of Mr. N. H. Poor the statute giving the Selectmen the right to grant the petition was read. It was an act of the last legislature and had not yet been printed. Mr. Farnham said the company was already formed but not yet organized under the statute, but it was one that would be shown to the board of Selectmen as a responsible one.

Mr. Evans, of Lynn, a witness, called; said it was cheaper to run an engine by this process than by steam. There had been formed six different companies since the passage of this law, in Spencer, Athol, Brockton, Boston, Worcester and several other places, and in others the coal gas companies are altering over their machinery to make this kind of gas. In Lynn the coal gas company is making this gas as well as the other. In New York five out of seven companies manufacture it. It makes cheaper and better quality of gas than the coal gas. Mr. Wm. H. Gerrish and Mr. Brimblecome of Lynn were also present. Mr. Hoag wanted to know how the Selectmen could give permission to a corporation not in existence. Mr. Farnham said they would agree to show to the Selectmen that the men forming the company were responsible, and there was nothing in the statute to compel them to give the names of the company, but the information would be given to the Selectmen but not the Salem Gas Light Company. In reply to a question of Chairman Southwick, Mr. Hoag said he did not represent the Salem Gas Light Company, and it was not made clear whom he did represent. Personally, he favored this company and thought it would be a benefit to the citizens. The old gas company was in the habit of presenting him with a bill once in three months, but he had not used the gas for a year. Mr. Evans said a gas engine would cost about the same as a boiler and engine, and the price of gas was from 35 to 70 cents per thousand. If permission was given Mr. Farnham, said the company would be incorporated immediately, and they had estimated the cost at $75,000 for eight or ten miles of piping, etc. Mr. Southwick said that all the opposition seemed to be concentrated in Mr. Hoag, as there was no response to an invitation for those opposed to speak. The Selectmen expressed a wish to see the burning of this gas and they will no doubt be invited to inspect it at Lynn shortly.

Book Notices.

PROF. COOK HEARD FROM.—Prof. Cook lately wrote: "Having studied man and his relations fifty years, and having read Dr. E. B. Foote's Plain Home Talk, I say disinterestedly and emphatically that it is worth its weight in gold; nay, gold cannot measure its value to humanity. It is such a book as only such a healthy, well-balanced magnificent brain can produce. Dr. Foote is one of the few doctors who, in his writings and practice, seeks to cure, not kill; to save and prolong life, not obstruct, poison or destroy it; to teach people the structure, functions, facts, forces and relations of the human brain and body, teach them the significance of life and how to make it healthy and happy also how to make the most of it.

Its information, instruction and advices in regard to parentage, marriage, social and sexual functions and relations, its facts and laws of mental, magnetic and temperamental adaptation in marriage and parentage that children may be healthy happy and viable, etc., etc., make it more valuable to suffering humanity than my poor words can express. What a vast amount of saving information for the people; a large book of 900 pages for only $1.50

The Dude and the Oysters.

Right alongside the Cremorne Mission is a new Cremorne Garden, a typical music-hall, with no features novel enough to justify description. Here the slummers learned two more lessons. The first was that, seated at a table in a quiet corner, sipping their beverages while scrutinizing the scene of dissipation. They were not, in aspect, sufficiently different from that of frequent visitors to attract special attention. The girls had dreaded the commotion which their respectability would create, and were vastly chagrined when it did not do any such thing. They were almost unnoticed. The second piece of instruction related to the folly of British imitation. Their seats were near the oyster-stand, at which a youthful dandy stood to take a midnight luncheon.

"'Pon me woard," he remarked, after emptying the final shell, "I cawn't get oysters anywhere else in town that taste as they do in London, ye know."

As London oysters are noted for their brackish, unpalatable quality, one of the slummers inquired, on the Angloманiac's departure, for an explanation.

"O, I got onto that dude the first time he came in," replied the man behind the counter, "he said the oysters I opened for him wasn't no good, and wanted ter know why we didn't open such ones as they did in London. Says I, 'I kin git yer some of ther London kind, but they'll cost yer double.' He said 'Bawther the expense,' an' I promised ter have 'em next time he dropped in. Well, when he showed up I jest opened a dozen of stale ones—reg'ler rankers, that was left over from ther day before. They hit hard. Now he comes in every night fer more of 'em. I sometimes guess they go ag'in his stomach, but he ain't going to let a little thing like that interfere with his English racket."—New York Letter.

A Lively Jelly Fish.

At the Broadway wharf one of the officers of the steamer Yaquina saw on the sides of that vessel a strange-looking object which much resembled a mass of jelly—transparent, but tinged with red. A close observation showed it to be some sort of a fish, and, from its general appearance, the first impression was that it was what is known as the devil-fish, or octopus; but the knowing ones soon showed that this was not the case, and the query is, "What is it?" As before stated, the fish looks like jelly; is about three feet long and eight inches thick. Its saucer like eyes are lustreless, and the head, like that of a turtle, can be drawn in nearly out of sight between two prominent shoulders. From the shoulders to the spade-shaped tail the body gradually tapers. From the head projects ten tentacles, each one of which, on the upper side, has about forty suckers, by the aid of which the fish was trying to climb up the steamer's side. The men aboard, with boathooks, captured the monster, but with considerable difficulty, as it would not release its hold until after the body had been considerably torn.—San Francisco Call.

In the game of life few players reach the home base, while many knock out before gaining the base. — Whithall Times.

HE KEPT THE WHOLE HOUSE AWAKE.—WASHINGTON, D. C.—Mr. F. McCleary, a prominent solicitor of patents of this city, was troubled for several weeks with a severe cough, which not only deprived him of sleep, but annoyed others. The only thing that did him any good, he says, was the new preparation Red Star Cough Cure, a purely vegetable compound, free from opiates, narcotics or poisons of any kind.

The man who picks up an empty pocket-book on the first day of the fourth month is called an "April Fool" but the man who expects to fill an empty pocket-book by investing his money in Southern lotteries is a fool all the year round.

THAT DIRTY DANDRUFF.—Dandruff is dirty and disagreeable in every way. It soils the clothing continually, and is accompanied by a hardly less annoying sensation of itching. The scalp is diseased. There is nothing in the world so thoroughly adapted to this trouble as Parker's Hair Balsam. It cleanses and heals the scalp, stops the falling hair and restores its original softness, gloss and color. Is not oily, highly perfumed, an elegant dressing. Very economical, as only a small occasional application keeps the hair in perfect condition.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sensitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY CURES A TERRIBLE CASE OF GRAVEL WHEN OTHER HELP FAILED.

What is Gravel? what causes it, and who are most liable to it? It is frequently attended with acute pain, and unless relief can be found, produces inflammation and death. Both sexes and all ages are liable to it, although men who have reached or passed middle age are its most common victims. Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable medicine for Gravel, as the disease seems on the increase, and we are glad to say that such a specific is now before the public in the form of DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter, selected from many similar communications:

PITTSFIELD, Mass., March, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy.

Dear Sir:—You have a right to know, and I desire the public to know my experience with Gravel and my remarkable recovery through the use of your "FAVORITE REMEDY." I am a carpenter living in this place, and there are plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of Gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away, and I had little more trouble until last July, 1883. One day when at work in my shop I was suddenly seized with a keen and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said: "I can do nothing for you. Your case is incurable!" I was frightened and went to the second, who said little, but gave me a prescription. It did no good.

Then began a series of experiences the agony and horror of which words cannot depict. Think of it! I was sometimes taken in the street, and would fall, writhing with agony, upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven, I then heard of "KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY," through Mr. P. P. Cooley. I had not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was nearly one-half an inch long. I persevered with the medicine, the symptoms gradually abated, and I have had no more trouble since. I am well, thanks to you and "FAVORITE REMEDY." Yours most gratefully,

JAMES D. KENNEDY.

What "FAVORITE REMEDY" did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to do so Address—Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

FAVORITE REMEDY

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Ave.

Full well I know the frozen hand has come
That smites the songs of grove and garden dumb,
And chills sad autumn's last chrysanthemum;

Yet would I find one blossom, if I might,
Ere the dark loom that weaves the robes of white
Hides all the wrecks of summer out of sight.

Sometimes in dim November's narrowing day,
When all the season's pride has passed away,
As mid the blackened stems and leaves we stray,

We spy the sheltered nook or rocky cleft
A starry disk the hurrying winds have left.
Of all its blooming sisterhood bereft:

Some pansy, with its wondering baby eyes—
Poor wayside nursling—fixed in blank surprise
At the rough welcome of unfriendly skies.

Or golden daisy—will it dare disclaim
The lion's tooth, to wear this gentle name?
Or blood-red salvia, with its lips aflame.

The storms have stripped the lily and the rose,
Still on its cheek the flush of summer grows,
And all its heart-leaves kindle as it blows.

So had I looked some bud or song to find
The careless winds of autumn left behind,
With these of earlier seasons' growth to blind.

Ah me! my skies are dark with sudden grief,
A flower lies faded on my garnered sheaf;
Yet let the sunshine gild this virgin leaf—

The joyous, blessed sunshine of the past,
Still with me, though the heavens are overcast—
The light that shines while life and memory last.

Go, pictured rhymes, for loving readers meant,
Bring back the smiles your jocund morning lent,
And warm their hearts with sunbeams yet unspent!

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

J. Wilkes Booth's Body.

"In reply to an inquirer last Sunday concerning the disposition that was made of J. Wilkes Booth's body, the Courier-Journal was in error," said General Dan Macaulay to a reporter yesterday.

"On what point was the answer wrong?"

"In the statement that the body was taken out on the ocean and thrown overboard. I know that a great many stories have been told on that subject, and I also know that all of them are groundless."

"How did you obtain your information?"

"From his immediate family. Immediately after his death his remains were buried in the navy yard at Washington, where they remained a year or two, during all of which time a sentinel stood guard over them. After the excitement passed away, and his death was in a measure forgotten, the family was permitted to remove the body, and it was taken to the family burying ground, on the old Junius Brutus Booth farm, a few miles from Baltimore. One of the family related the incident of the reinterment to me, and told me that the coffin was opened in order that there might be no uncertainty about the matter, and the features were identified."—Interview with General Dan Macauley.

Several days ago Mr. Saunders, the proprietor of the Woodland Democrat, had occasion to transmit a message to Oakland, California, and the following was formulated and started over the wire in good shape: "Cannot come down till Thursday—foreman drunk." As appointed, he went down on Thursday, and was not a little chagrined to learn that his telegram had been the source of much puzzling and speculation among his friends, to whom it read as follows: "Cannot come down till Thursday forenoon—drunk."—Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.

A kiss is a paroxysmal contact between the labial appendages attached to the superior and inferior maxillaries respectively of a man and woman or two women. The younger the parties are the more paroxysmal will be the paroxysm, and in case it be observed by the fond father of the paroxyzed young lady, there is also likely to be a perigee between the paroxyzer's pedalic junction and the phalangeal extremities of the metatarsus, tarsus, and other bric-a-brac depending from the old gentleman's right leg. The kiss itself is not the paroxysm. It is merely the vibrations of the superincumbent atmosphere resultant from the expulsion of the sweetness from each of the pairs of lips engaged in creating it.

Fifteen years ago a poor boy went from Brooklyn and journeyed to the vast, illimitable, changing West. Alone, penniless and friendless, he struggled with adverse fortune. Nights of anxiety followed days of care and toil, yet still he hoped and wrought; honestly, honorably, patiently, he earned and ate the bread of manly labor. Fifteen years of struggle and toil, and last week the local papers of Rock Rapids shouted to the world the glad news that he had caught a black bass weighing five pounds and three ounces. Young man, industry, honest industry and perseverence are the winning cards in the struggle for existence, and virtue is its own reward. It is well that this is so, as that is frequently the only reward she gets.—Bob Burdette.

The Waterbury American relates the following as having recently occurred on a Connecticut railroad: "A woman, well dressed and intelligent, boarded a train with three children, whom she placed on the seat in front of her. They were neatly dressed in holiday attire and were evidently bent on a day of fun at the picnic grounds. She paid her fare to the conductor and turned her attention out of the window when he looked inquiringly at the children. When he asked about them she turned and said indifferently: 'I don't know; they are not mine.' The little ones were uneasy, and one of them, a pretty little girl, had a look of grief and surprise on her face that was pitiful to see. She turned around, and, as the woman said 'They are not mine,' she threw her arms over the seat and cried out, despairingly, 'Why, I am, mamma.' The conductor passed on, too indignant to think of his fare. 'Madam,' he said, 'I hope you are ashamed of yourself for disowning your own children for a matter of thirty cents.' She gave the little girl a bitter scolding, and when they got off at the grounds they did not look happy."

Somebody has discovered that the Indian farmers on Pyramid Lake, Nevada, thresh their wheat by hand and winnow it in baskets, just as the Egyptians did 3,000 years ago.

The Egyptian farmer with 10 acres is taxed more than an American with 100.

SPARKS.

Sunday morning at 1.20 o'clock, Mrs. Jeanette Brown, widow of the late Joseph Brown, living on Pine street near Winona Mills, was awakened by hearing the horses in the barn, about thirty feet to the rear of the house, kicking, and called her sons, who got up and upon looking out found that the whole upper part of the building was in flames. Running out they attempted to save the horses, of which there were two in the barn, and succeeded in getting one out, while the other fell and perished in the flames. The horse which was saved was badly burned about the head and body and will probably have to be killed. The fire was, in all probability the work of an incendiary and was set in the loft over the mangers of the horses, spreading with great rapidity to a shed and milk house connected with the barn and by 2 o'clock the buildings were down flat. The neighbors arrived early on the scene and turned their attention to saving the house which was in great danger owing to the intense heat, but by the aid of buckets and two little Johnson pumps owned in the neighborhood the building was kept thoroughly wet, although it was on fire several times. The furniture was removed from the house as it was feared that it would burn in spite of all exertions. The barn was a neat cottage style building 24x30 feet and cost about $800. It was occupied by Daniel Brown, the grocer at the West Peabody Junction, and by Charles and William Brown, the milkmen whose horse perished in the fire. The wagons, carriages and sleighs were all saved, but five sets of harnesses, sixty cans of milk ready for delivery in the morning, and about forty empty cans, together with ice box, tools, etc., were destroyed. The total loss is not far from $2000 on which there was no insurance, policies having run out about a year ago, at the time the house was repaired, but it was the intention to have had the insurance renewed within a few days. In the cellar of the barn were two valuable pigs, both being burned to death. The Brown boys were in the barn at 12 o'clock, and as it was moonlight no lanterns or matches were used, and no pipes or cigars had been lighted or smoked about the premises for the night. At 12 o'clock everything appeared to be perfectly safe. The blow is a severe one to the family who have seen nothing but trouble for the past year or two. Two children have been buried, followed by the robbery of the store of Daniel Brown, and the collision at Needham's crossing, whereby Resolute Ingraham lost his life, and the new wagon of Charles and William was wrecked, for which the B. & M. have paid nothing. Next came the fire at Mudge's in Danvers Centre, by which an older brother, David S. Brown lost his grocery store, and this last fire which truly illustrates the old saying "that trouble never comes singly." The horse that was saved belonged to Daniel who was offered $300 for it about a week ago. Dr. Woods was called and was in hopes of saving the animal, whose sufferings were terrible to witness. The whistle of the shifting engine at the gravel pit was sounded but no alarm was heard in Peabody, and had it been heard, no help could have reached the scene in time to be of any service. Several persons saw the light of the fire in town, but thought it was in Wakefield. The fire made a clean sweep, leaving nothing large enough to pick up in the way of lumber. The foliage around within one hundred feet of the fire was badly scorched.

The office of Chief Engineer is now vacant by the removal of Chief Wm. J. Roome to Salem, where he has a tenement on Bickford street. The Selectmen will probably fill the vacancy this week. The names presented are those of John A. Hart, S. S. Littlefield, H. A. Southwick, Daniel B. Lord and Thomas E. Wilson. The great question is, who will be the next Chief?

Steamer 1 answers the first alarm for the next month.

It is now expected that the horse which was so badly burned at the West Peabody fire will live.

Look out for fire from crackers and fire works on the Fourth. Keep your garden hose handy in case of any slight fire.

The Boston Sunday Times of last Sunday has a picture of Chief Engineer Abraham C. Moody, of the Lynn Fire Department. Chief Moody formerly lived in this town and carried on the fish business on the Square.

We desire to call the attention of those of our readers who are undecided as to where they shall spend their summer vacation, to Jefferson, N. H., and to the Waumbek Hotel, which is advertised in another column. Jefferson is known favorably to some of our people who have indulged in its bracing air, witnessed the romantic scenery everywhere around it, and enjoyed the pleasures of its hotel life. Waumbek Hotel is situated at the base of Starr King Mountain, and from its verandas the trains can be seen ascending and descending Mt. Washington, and it is in all respects the best hotel in Jefferson —as well as the largest. Of late the proprietors have been at large expense to make the drainage perfect, and hay fever, catarrh and asthma are unknown there. The terms are reasonable and we know of no better spot to spend a few weeks. Circulars can be obtained at this office.

The travel to the beaches has opened early this year, and at no place is there a more auspicious outlook for a good season than at Hotel Nahant, kept by Samuel Soule & Son. Last Sunday there were numbers of Peabody people there who seemed to be enjoying the sea breeze to their heart's content. Cars for Nahant House leave Central Square, Lynn, to connect with Peabody cars, both going and coming, and passengers are transferred free of charge. It is one of the most convenient resorts on our coast for Peabody people. Messrs. Soule serve fish dinners in excellent style. Everything about the dining room is as neat and clean as possible, and everything is cooked to order so as to have it served smoking hot. The proprietors have had more applications for rooms for the season thus early than ever before. This is as it should be, for Messrs. Soule know how to keep a hotel, and it is a pleasure to be one of their guests.

BALDWIN'S NEW HOTEL.

Baldwin's new hotel is now completed and ready for occupancy. Little by little all this week portions of furniture and other utensils have been moved from the old hotel as they could be spared. Although it will take a day or so yet for Mr. Baldwin to set his house perfectly in order, yet he is ready to see his friends and make them as comfortable as possible. The new hotel is a credit to the enterprise of Mr. Baldwin and should be appreciated by our citizens as we have no doubt it will be. A town of the size of Peabody has outgrown the old hotel. The new Town Hall has brought to town many companies in the show business, some of whom Mr. Baldwin has been unable to accommodate, and all of whom he has been unable to entertain as he would desire. In many cases portions of the troupe have gone to Salem—in others the entire company have gone there. One of the first questions asked by a manager in making engagements on the road, is in regard to hotel accommodations. Thus far they have been poor enough, but with the new hostelry there will be no difficulty in this respect.

The site of the new hotel is a historic one. In years gone by a hotel stood on nearly the same ground, known as the Essex Coffee House, owned and kept by the late Benj. Goodrich. This resort will be remembered by our older residents as one of the best in this vicinity. It was burned down in the great fire and never rebuilt. Mr. Goodrich erected the brick dwelling house instead, where he afterwards resided, and which is the nucleus of the present hotel. The hotel which is vacated by Mr. Baldwin was built by the late Jonathan Dustin in 1825, and was known at that time as Dustin's Hotel. Later it was sold to the late Samuel Ham, father of Mr. Ham of this town, and was kept by him, a Mr. Mackintire and Daniel Preston, of Danvers, at different times, in the order we have mentioned them, until 1852. In June of that year —the Centennial year of the old town of Danvers—the lease of the hotel and stable was taken by Mr. Charles Simonds. In 1857 the hotel portion was taken by the late Washington Simonds, Mr. Charles Simonds retaining the stable, which has been known as one of the best in this region around up to the present time. The hotel was also well known under Mr. Washington Simonds' management. Here were given for many years those famous dinners on the birthday of George Peabody —in which our leading citizens participated. In 1881, July 1st, the hotel passed into the hands of the present proprietor, and the old sign of Simonds' Hotel was changed to Baldwin's Hotel. During all this time since 1825 the hotel property was owned by the heirs of the late Mr. Dustin, until its recent purchase by J. B. Thomas.

The new hotel is a decided change from the old one. The entrance is up the stone steps—the old entrance to the dwelling house—and the visitors at the crossing of the threshold tread a fine marble floor which is the work of Bowker, Torrey & Co. of Boston. The large double parlors next to the Post Office are to be used as an office and smoking room, and a billiard table for the use of the guests is to be placed in the front room. Across the hall the other parlor is to be used as the ladies' parlor and reception room. It is nicely furnished and will be appreciated by the guests. In the rear is the coat room and wash room, from which entrance is made to the dining room in the new addition. In the rear of this hall is the sample room, which is at present closed. One of the greatest surprises from the main hall is the new dining room, which is the entire dimensions of the addition—30x42. The floor is of the finest hard pine--the room light, airy and comfortable. It can seat 120 people, and has both large and small tables, giving it a decidedly metropolitan appearance. In the rear is a portion reserved for washing dishes, etc., and a stairway from the rear directly to the kitchen. This room is also a fine one, furnished with an elegant Devonshire hotel range, from the establishment of F. Morandi & Son of Boston. In the lower part, or basement of the hotel, are all the modern conveniences--two large bath rooms for the convenience of the guests, with hot and cold water, set tubs of soapstone for the laundry work, work benches for cutting meat and making all needed repairs about the hotel. A fine refrigerator has been built especially for Mr. Baldwin by Frank Trask to be filled with ice from the outside and with a capacity for 1200 lbs. of ice. It is fitted with shelves and hooks and capable of holding all the meats, vegetables and everything needed by Mr. Baldwin for his use. It is a splendid piece of workmanship and does credit to Mr. Trask. The boiler room is fitted with a large horizontal boiler 9 feet in length, furnished by Dobbins of Lowell. The office, formerly occupied by Dr. Worcester, to which entrance is made from the porch outside, will be used as a barber shop. The entire building will be heated by steam and there is hot and cold water on every floor.

There are 32 rooms in all in the hotel, and many of them are elegantly furnished. The three rooms over the office are furnished en suite, and cannot be surpassed in any hotel, large, high studded, good beds and elegant surroundings. Opposite is the room which "mine host" himself will occupy. On this same floor are eight rooms in the new part, all of the same size, on either side of a broad hall. The hall and rooms are furnished with new carpets of modern design, new furniture and everything to make them homelike and comfortable. They will be furnished differently, but there will be no opportunity for a preference as they are all good. The foundation for the new hotel part was built by John Linehan, which is a satisfactory guarantee that it was well done. The mason work was done by Farmer & Pendar of Salem; the carpenter work by Calvin Pierce; the painting by William Blaney; the plumbing by E. G. Kelley; the piping by Dobbins & Gerrauhty of Lowell; the new carpets are from the house of J. H. Pray, Sons & Co. of Boston.

In every respect the new hotel is a credit to the town. Its close proximity to Upton's Hall renders it convenient for parties who desire to engage Mr. Baldwin to do the catering, and suppers can be served either in his new dining room or in the dining room of the hall. The table of Mr. Baldwin has had an excellent reputation since he has taken the old hotel, and will be, no doubt, even more deserving of the patronage of our people in the future. Such patronage ought to be given, and every encouragement to the proprietor in his new enterprise. We trust our people will take the trouble to call and see Mr. Baldwin where they will be pleasantly received by him and Mr. Frank Hayden, a former clerk there, who is pleasantly remembered by many friends in town, who will be glad to see him again at his old post. The new hostelry is deserving of the success which we feel sure it will receive.

NOTES

Along with the rest of the twelve hundred people I went last Thursday to listen to the graduating exercises of the Peabody High School, and like the rest of the twelve hundred I stood on the stairs for an hour and waited for the doors to open, and entered the hall, burning hot, anticipating the enjoyment of a rare literary treat. Well, it would have been a treat to have got out, after I had been there fifteen minutes; but I was wedged in between two very fleshy ladies, and for four long hours I sat there, at times lulled to sleep by the hum of voices on the stage for I could not hear a word. Again, aroused by the voice of a speaker like Harry Poor, or an exercise like the one of the young ladies with the polo sticks, I in turn would wake up the fat ladies on each side of me and then we would all look at the stage as if we enjoyed it and were glad we come. Of course we enjoyed it, didn't we stay after nearly every one had gone home? After the first part about half had got enough, and from that time to the close there was constant leaving till the time the prizes were awarded, when only the immediate family of graduates remained. Who was to blame for this? I don't know—largely the hall with its poor acoustic properties, partly the graduates, who seemed to be afraid to let themselves out, and partly those who had the matter in charge for presenting such a long programme with so little variation. There is another thing that was overdone, and should be prohibited all together, that was the presenting of flowers. No matter how poorly the graduate did, if he or she had a friend present they got a bouquet. The following will show how foolish it looked to the audience. One of the young misses was to receive a bouquet and a pupil was to present it. He took his position, bouquet in hand, at the foot of the steps leading to the stage when she came on, and as she progressed with her essay he gradually moved up till toward the last he was nearly on the top step. This was too conspicuous a place for the youth and he began to pick out his friends in the audience, and while he was smiling on them the young lady got through, and as the boy with the bouquet was not on the lookout she started for him, after that bouquet.

There was a party at the house of a certain young lady in town one night, recently, and as most of the old games such as post office, button button and who has got the safety-pin were found rather warm, a new game was introduced, and a young lady was put up at auction, the proceeds to be used for the purchase of ice cream, but the bidding was not lively and her beau who was present felt in duty bound to bid, and he purchased her at his own price five cents a pound. Thus far there was lots of fun, but when the young lady who is quite weighty refused to be weighed, that broke up the party. Five cents a pound is extremely cheap for a Peabody girl and yet if Walter should "call time" on this one I think he would come out seriously in debt.

The writer of this department is in receipt of an anonymous letter written by some person who thinks he is "funny." It will be my aim to identify the writer and let the world look at him just as I find him.

I was in one of our stores the other day and saw the express man leave a quantity of powder. I inquired of the boy if the Engineers of the Fire Department knew of its existence and he aid they did not, and that there was another large lot of it there. This quantity of powder is kept in a room adjoining the store and in the evening there is smoking and loafing there. Suppose the store should catch fire and our firemen not knowing of the existence of the explosure should enter the building with a hose. The result is fearful to contemplate. Whose duty is it to look after these things, and with the present neglect who is going to warn the firemen of their danger?

W. B. Gifford & Co., offer irrespective of their regular line of goods, universally acknowledged as being of good value, one or more articles in each of their departments at prices that will astonish you. These prices include the carpet, rug, curtain, and wall paper department. Every lady can see the importance of this sale, as the articles are necessary for present use.

Poet's Corner.

When Martens Follow Spring.

MARIAN PENDLEBURY.

On the roof-tree sparrows chattered,
And the gathering martens cried;
Autumn's gold the glades bespattered
As a lover's arts I plied—
As I pleaded, "Oh, belov'd one, on my bosom fold thy wing!"
"Yes," she answered—looking upward—"when the martens follow Spring."

So I watched the snowflakes falling,
With a gladness naught could chill:
In the warmth of hope forestalling,
Joys which patience must fulfill.
For within I whispered lowly, "To this breast my love will cling
When the blossoming hawthorn reddens and the martens follow Spring."

Soon the violet doffed her cover,
And the snowdrop rang her bell;
Catkins tressed the hazels over,
And the gorse flamed on the fell.
Then I knelt, and, whisp'ring, pleaded,
"Lo, belov'd, the thrushes sing!"
Faint she answered, "For me never will the martens follow Spring."

Close I looked, and on her forehead
Marked the pencilings of pain;
Saw her limpid eyes full stored,
Like fringed pools o'erfed with rain.
And I cried aloud, sore stricken, "Oh, belov'd one, stay thy wing!
For life cometh, cometh surely, when the martens follow Spring."

They are chattering, chattering gayly
As their nests they mend with care
And I watch them, watch them daily,
With a dumbly blank despair;
For they home returned from roaming, but my love on tired wing,
Had just mounted up forever, when the martens followed Spring.

The following is the tribute of John G. Whittier, poet of Essex County, to the return of James Russell Lowell.

For the hands that cannot clasp thee,
For the voices that are dumb,
For each and all I bid thee
A grateful welcome home!

For Cedarcroft's sweet singer
To the ninefold Muses dear;
For the Seer the winding Concord
Paused by his door to hear;

For him who, to the music
Of the hemlock and the pine
Set the old and tender story
Of the lorn Evangeline.

And for him the three-hilled city
Shall hold in memory long,
Whose name is the hint and token,
Of the pleasant Fields of Song!

For the old friends unforgotten,
For the young thou hast not known,
I speak their heart-warm greeting;
Come back and take thy own!

Come home with all the garlands
That Crown of right thy head,
I speak for comrades living,
I speak for comrades dead!

A Summer Experience.

They sat long in the shadows at even,
And talked in a lover-like way;
He said something that sounded like heaven,
She murmured an indistinct nay.
He told her the summer was ended,
That their joy was nearing its close,
Her voice with the zephyrs was blended
And she gave him a half open rose.

Next morning they met near the river—
"Some strangers," he said, "come last night."
"Ah, indeed," said the girl, in a quiver;
"Do you know that young woman in white?"
He stuttered a little, then bravely,
"Oh, yes, we are promised to wed.
And the man, do you know him?" Then gravely,
"We've been married since last Spring" she said.

A COMMON SENSE IDEA.—Farmers and other out door workers, have long suffered from the too rapid wearing out of the soles of their Rubber Boots. Dirt and gravel when wet, offer the best possible tools for cutting and grinding away the rubber sole, and to this destructive agency, Rubber Boots are continually exposed, from the very nature of their uses. Some two years ago, however, the "CANDEE" Rubber Co., of New Haven, Conn., hit upon the idea of making their boot soles double thick in that part which undergoes the greatest amount of wear. By their invention the extra rubber is added on the ball just where it is needed and no where else. So that while the boot is increased one hundred fold in durability, the weight is but very slightly increased. This improvement known as the Double Thick Ball, is advertised in our columns by Messrs. Sage & Co., of Boston, the "Candee" Co.'s Distributing Agents, and those of our readers who are interested in the matter, can investigate for themselves by examining the goods on sale at those of our stores which deal in Rubber Boots.

Selected Story.

Madge Heathcote's Revenge.

BY A. E. FREEMAN.

CHAPTER I.

"Heaven has no rage like love to hatred turned,
Nor hell a fury like a woman scorned."

And so this is the end?

I'm sure I don't know how else you expected it to end.

The first speaker, a tall, angular girl of seventeen years, was the only child of a widow lady, whose income was so slender that she was glad to find accommodation during the summer months for one or two city boarders. The summer in which our story opens, their only boarder was Guy Travers, a wealthy young Philadelphian, who, tired of the gaiety and dissipation of city life, had taken board with Mrs. Heathcote in the quiet little village of Glenmore for three months, which time he had spent in teaching Madge Heathcote to love him. Had any one asked him, he could not have told why he had done so, unless it was for amusement, her artless innocence was so refreshing—and—and—well Madge Heathcote, that tall, awkward girl, who would have been positively ugly but for her magnificent black eyes and luxuriant dark, wavy hair, possessed a greater charm for Guy Travers than older, fairer women had ever done.

Then after three months of perfect happiness to poor Madge, he told her he was going away, going perhaps, never to return; he said she had made the time pass very pleasantly during his stay in the village, and when he returned to his city home, he should often recall the pleasant days and the nice little girl at Glenmore.

That was all; he had held her in his arms and kissed her sweet red lips a hundred times; he had told her over and over again that she was the only one he had ever loved; the only one he ever could love; and now he was going back to his city home, where he would condescend to think of the nice little girl he had left behind him at Glenmore.

Guy Travers, with his handsome looks and soft, honied words, had broken the heart of many a sweet girl before he had met Madge Heathcote, but none of them had ever repelled him with the scorn and contempt that fairly blazed from the dark eyes yonder, as she repeated:

So this is the end; I was foolish to expect anything better from you, I suppose?

What did you expect of me, Madge? he questioned. You surely didn't think I was going to marry you; if you did, I must say I am surprised at your lack of judgment.

Guy Travers, I expected you to act as an honorable man; that was all. What right had you to tell me of your love for me; what right had you to win my love if you did not intend to marry me?

Madge! he went over to where she was standing, and attempted to put his arm around her in the old fond way, but she repulsed him angrily. Madge! he repeated, if you love me, if you ever did love me, darling, why do you speak in that cruel way? I'm very fond of you, little one; indeed I am, and would not hurt you by word or deed, for anything in the world; you know that. But, my little darling, you forget how different are our stations; but I love you dearly, dearer I believe than anything else in the world.

Go away, she exclaimed; get out of my sight, and never let me see your cowardly face again; I hate you so bitterly.

He laughed lightly but uneasily.

Madge, be reasonable; you don't know what you are saying, child; I have done you no harm.

No, she answered passionately; you have done me no harm; you have only broken my heart; but that is nothing. What difference can the breaking of one heart, more or less, make to handsome Guy Travers. Guy Travers, she continued, turning fiercely towards him, you came here this summer for your pleasure, and for your amusement; you have wantonly broken my heart and spoiled my whole life, but I declare to you this day, that as you have made me suffer, so you shall suffer. The God of the widow and orphan will never let you go unpunished, and though it may be long ere that punishment comes, I am certain it will come, and so saying, she turned quickly and went towards the house.

Madge! Madge! he called, you will not go without saying good-bye, will you; let us at least part as friends.

She turned her pale face towards him for a moment as she scornfully echoed:

Friends! friends! Guy Travers! I am your bitterest enemy henceforth and forever, and she then passed into the house.

Guy Travers pulled his dark moustache fiercely, for in this way he loved this proud girl, who now casts his love and friendship aside with contempt.

Well, he said slowly, as Madge wills it, I suppose this is the end. Am I sorry or the reverse? Ah! could he have penetrated the future, he would have had little doubt on that point.

The next day Guy Travers left Glenmore for his city home. He endeavored several times to see Madge, but she always succeeded in avoiding him; he was piqued and angry, and mentally he called her a little fool more than once.

You will bid Miss Madge good-bye for me, my dear Mrs. Heathcote, and tell her I hope we shall meet again.

After he had departed, Rhoda, the little waiting maid, gave Madge a letter what Marse Guy dun lef fur her, and in the seclusion of her own room she opened it and read as follows:

GLENMORE, VIRGINIA.

My Darling: Why have you kept yourself out of my sight all this time? Never giving me a good-bye kiss or wishing me bon voyage. Is it that you are still angry with me; silly child, you must forget that little scene of yesterday—forget that you ever loved me other than as a chance friend—your mother's boarder—and be again your own good little self. Some day you will thank me for what you now view in the light of a grievous wrong. My dear child, you must not forget that you are only a poor doctor's orphan, and that after the death of your mother, you will be compelled to go out into the world and fight the battle of life. This little affaire de cœur between us, will by that time have hardened you somewhat, and strengthened you for the conflict. Meanwhile, should you ever need a sincere and affectionate friend, you will find one in

Yours devotedly,
GUY TRAVERS.

An hour later Mrs. Heathcote found her daughter white and senseless, prostrate on the floor, with this cruel missive at her feet.

That night and for many others, Madge Heathcote tossed in a raging fever—brain fever the doctors pronounced it—and gave small hopes of her recovery. Mrs. Heathcote, sitting by her bedside, learned from her delirious ravings all that her child had suffered in silence. Many and fervent were the prayers she offered up, that Guy Travers would get his reward.

Six weeks did Madge Heathcote struggle against death, and finally came out victorious. But as she began the slow approach to health, her mother worn out with constant anxiety and watching, gradually weakened, and in three months from the day Guy Travers had left them, Madge was an orphan, alone in the world. And for all this, she said bitterly, I have to thank Guy Travers. Then with the few dollars remaining after all the debts were settled, and her first love letter in her purse, she left her native village forever, leaving behind her no trace as to her destination. The villagers shook their heads and looked grave whenever Madge Heathcote was mentioned. Where she had gone or what she was doing was a mystery none could solve, but as Mrs. Gripps, the deacon's wife, said:

When a gal leaves her own dear village in sich an underhand way as she did, it's not fur any good, you may depend.

* * * * *

Weak and weary, Madge Heathcote arrived in New York after a journey of sixteen hours. She secured a room with a respectable family, and retired early to rest. The next morning after a scanty breakfast, she attired herself in her deep mourning and started to find her old music master, in the hope that he would aid her in obtaining a few pupils, but her heart sank when arriving at her destination. She was told that Prof. Schwartz had been dead more than a year. What was she to do now? She went from place to place, but without any success whatever. She was a stranger, alone and friendless, and in all that great, grand city, there was no place for her.

I will make one more effort, she said. I will go to the great Signor de Sanza, and ask him to aid me, and if I fail again, I can but return to my poor lodging and make a fresh start to-morrow.

Asking the first policeman to direct her to the Professor's residence she started thither. Fortune favored her this time. Signor de Sanza was at home, and would see her. He listened attentively while she told him the sad history of her poverty and utter friendless, and her anxiety to earn an honest living.

When she had finished, he requested her to let him hear her execute, and seating herself at the piano, she played a brilliant fantasia, which he pronounced well done.

Wait, she said, let me sing something for you; I want to know if you think I could earn a subsistence with my voice.

With a few preliminary chords she sang with great expression, Home Sweet Home. The Signor listened breathlessly. She began the second verse:

An exile from home, splendor dazzles in vain, and as the recollection of her dear old home and the mother she had lost, came back to her, she burst into tears, and her head sank on the keyboard. De Sanza was deeply moved. He went over to her, and placing his hand kindly on the bowed head, he said earnestly:

Signorina, let me be your friend; come and make your home with us. I know my daughter will be delighted to have a companion about her own age, and in five years you will make your fortune with that magnificent voice. You have one of the finest voices I have ever heard in America.

You can make my fortune in five years, she repeated. Are you sure?

As sure, he answered, as that you and I are in this room; that is, of course, if you will put yourself entirely under my management.

A glad look crept into the weary black eyes; a slight color into the pale, thin cheeks, as she repeated over and over again to herself, A fortune in five years; it is a long time, but I can afford to wait. Then turning to de Sanza, she laid her hand in his, and said:

Signor, I agree to the terms gladly; only let me win fame and fortune.

CHAPTER II.

PAID BACK IN HIS OWN COIN.

You really must go to the opera to-night, Guy; I don't believe you have heard Viola de Sanza yet; all New York is praising her.

Guy Travers has just returned from a three years' tour on the Continent. He has forgotten all about that little episode in Virginia five years ago. In looks he has not altered one iota since we saw him last; he is the same handsome careless fellow he ever was, and all his dear friends are glad to welcome him home again.

Who is she? this Viola de Sanza, he asked in a careless tone; I do not remember hearing of her abroad.

No, answered his friend; she is a new star just from Italy, I believe. Her father or uncle, is her manager; and a deuced old boy he is, too, I can tell you; won't let a fellow look at her off the stage, much less speak to her.

All right, said Guy, I'll go with you, and see your divinity.

That night the opera house was crowded to excess, and Guy Travers seemed more eager than the crowd for the curtain to rise. At last, amidst deafening applause it slowly rose, so slowly that Guy thought it would be all night ere he saw this bright particular star, and when at last she stepped forward in all her regal beauty, she was wildly applauded, and Guy Travers, as he looked at the graceful rounded figure, the dimpled white arms, the small shapely hands, and the glorious black hair piled high on the proud head, little thought that this queenly woman was the girl with whom he had trifled so heartlessly five years ago.

Her eyes wandered over the sea of faces, until they met those of Guy Travers; then the swift color rushed over the lovely face, dyeing cheeks, brow and throat a deep crimson. All that night she seemed to sing to him only; again and again her eyes met his with an expression sometimes so pathetic, sometimes so pleading, then so saucy, that he was nearly crazed. He listened entranced to the rich tones of that powerful melodious voice, which could bring tears from eyes unaccustomed to weep. Then again her voice like a bird in its flight would rise higher and higher, until its music was lost in the distance; and in his heart he made a silent vow that he would move heaven and earth to win that peerless creature for his wife.

The opera over, Jack Mordaunt, Esq., presented himself at the side door and sent in his card, asking permission to introduce to the Signorina his friend, Guy Travers. The Signorina sent out her regrets, but would be unable to see either gentlemen that night. Night after night they received the same answer. The Signorina was very sorry but she was too fatigued.

For three weeks Guy Travers was the first to enter the opera house and the last to leave it, and although his friends would often chaff him about being hard hit, and remark his worn haggard face, he was not the man to give up whilst there was the faintest shadow of a chance to win. On Viola de Sanza he had staked his all, though it was reported that she was the betrothed bride of Sir Maurice Conway, a wealthy English baronet.

At last, however, fortune favored him. At a grand dinner party to which he was invited, he met her, and was supremely happy. She said she was delighted to meet him, as she had seen him so often at the opera house, but of course she did not know that he was the Mr. Travers whom Mr. Mordaunt wished to present, and she was so sweet and gracious, that he was more infatuated than ever.

The day she had so longed for had come at last; for more than five years she had waited, and now she could pay him back in his own coin. She invited him to call on her whenever he had nothing else to do; she would always make him welcome.

After this he was always near her; he walked with her, drove with her, and for three months was her devoted slave. During this time he often saw Sir Maurice, but as Viola did not seem to notice him much, he did not consider him a rival.

One evening he told her how dear she was to him; how he worshiped her, and how, if it would serve her, he would gladly lay down his life for her dear sake.

He was kneeling at her feet, and as she looked down on his handsome passionate face, and dark love lit eyes, she laid her small white hand on his head, and asked him lightly if he had ever loved a woman before he met her?

He took the dimpled hand and smothered it with kisses, then he answered her:

Viola, my darling, until I saw you, I never met one woman for whom I cared one iota.

And when was that? she questioned. When did you see me first—remember, the very first time?

The night you appeared in 'Travita' he replied.

And you never loved any one before that? Guy, I can scarcely believe you, she said, laughing, but she permitted him to take a kiss, and call her all the sweet names he could think of, just as he had done at Glenmore, nearly six years ago.

Viola, my darling, he said suddenly, you have told me nothing of your early life, and you know I am so eager to know everything about you, my queen.* Has your past life, aside from your career in public, been a happy one?

My early life would be scarcely interesting to you, as it was a very sad one, she replied; and my career in public ends with this month. And you, she answered, have told me nothing of yours. Come, Guy, I am your confessor to-night. Is there nothing in the past you regret?

Confession is good for the soul, he said. No my dearest, there is nothing I regret or repent of excepting that

The Elder's Joke.

A CASE OF DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND BETWEEN HIM AND A SENATOR.

A reporter heard yesterday a story of cards and card playing involving a former United States senator and the elder of a church in New England. The affair happened some time ago, when the senator was president of a Western Railroad and had his pocket full of railroad passes. It was a case of giving a Roland for an Oliver. The senator and his friend had started for Washington. The elder was taken sick. The senator prescribed a mild dose from a little black bottle in his satchel, and gave the elder the key to the satchel to help himself. All the senator's passes lay alongside the little black bottle. When the conductor came along the passes were missing. Meanwhile the elder, who was a great lady's man, had seated himself with three ladies. The senator explained matters as best he could to the conductor and bided his time to get revenge. He had a pack of cards in his satchel and a copy of the Tribune in his hand. The cards were carefully wrapped in the paper, and presently the senator stepped blandly along the aisle and said: Ah, Elder Blank, have you seen the Tribune? No? Well, here it is when you want to look at it. As he spoke he pushed the paper down in the outside breast pocket of the elder's coat. Then he went back in the car and primed a confederate, who came along and said: Let me see your Tribune, elder, suiting his action to the words and pulling out the paper, while the cards showered all over the ladies' laps and the floor. The elder blushed to the roots of his hair, bit his lips, but finally laughed as his companions rallied him on carrying such credentials around. The senator joined in the laughter. Presently the elder said:

Senator, I will play you five games of euchre for a dollar a game.

Everybody was amazed.

You are not serious? said the senator.

Never more so in my life, was the cool reply.

They sat down to play, while the passengers in the car flocked around in wonderment at the elder's freak. He won three games, the senator two. The latter passed over a five-dollar gold piece. The elder put it in his pocket, sank back lazily in his chair, and picked up a paper. Then the conversation ran like this, amid breathless attention, the senator growing excited and the elder as cool as an icycle.

That was a five-dollar gold piece I gave you.

Yes; that's all right.

But it was a five-dollar gold piece.

Certainly; I told you I understood it.

But I want my change.

I don't understand you.

You won three games and I won two.

Of course, I know that.

Well, then, I want $4. There's only a dollar coming to you.

Oh! do I understand you that you thought I was betting on the games? Is that your proposition?

Exactly.

Why, my dear senator, how could you so misapprehend me? I never made a bet in my life. It is against my principles. Moreover I proposed nothing of the kind. I made you the most simple proposition in the world. I told you I would play five games of euchre with you for a dollar a game. You assented. I played the five games. You gave me $5. The account is square.

And the elder kept the gold piece, while the crowd laughed, and the senator remarked that he guessed he would sell himself for a nickel at the next station, where the pipe lines crossed, to be used as a "go-devil" for cleaning out the pipes.

Ladies who have long suffered from disorders common to their sex, and failed to obtain relief by the heroic old-school methods of knife, caustics and supports, should try the modern common-sense methods of Dr. Foote, of 120 Lexington Ave., N. Y. City, and follow the example of the lady who wrote Jan. 6, 1883: "It is simply wonderful that after a miserable illness of nearly five years, in which time I exhausted the skill of four physicians, you should cure me in six months. I give you permission to print these lines in the hope that they may lead other sufferers to place their cases in your hands. Lock box, 30, White River Junction, Vermont."

FARADAY.

Of all the English scientific experimenters of the age, Faraday may be placed at the head. Born in a humble station he advanced step by step, until almost unaided he reached this high position. How did he obtain this great success? Not by inheritance, nor by the assistance of influential friends who often prove such powerful allies, not even by the aid of a liberal education,—Faraday had none of these; his great success is due to his quickness and accuracy in the observation of nature. While very young he was obliged to work for a livelihood, having been apprenticed to a bookbinder, but he greatly preferred to gratify his curiosity by experiments, which he had the good fortune to encounter in the many books that passed under his notice. Having no apparatus of his own, he was obliged to manufacture the necessary instruments. A small portion of his weekly income was reserved by the young philosopher to gratify his scientific taste. Becoming so greatly infatuated with the physical science, he applied at a neighboring institution for a position. As would naturally be expected "no answer" resulted. Not at all discouraged by this he communicated with his former friend and adviser, Sir Humphrey Davy, who sent a kind reply advising Faraday to give up the attempt, as science was a hard mistress who paid badly.

A position, however, was soon offered him at the Royal Institution as an assistant. His first experiment conducted under the supervision of Davy dealt with the extraction of sugar from the beet root. It must not be supposed that all of his researches were of a harmless nature; while examining the properties of that highly explosive compound known as ter-chloride of nitrogen, he accidentally caused the gas to explode with great violence, so that it fractured the glass mask placed over his face as a precaution against disaster, causing pieces of glass to enter his eyes. Such a disagreeable accident as this did not, in the least, prevent the young philosopher from continuing his labors. He worked with a will, producing compounds never before imagined. That ill-smelling liquid known as bisulphide of carbon was first produced by him. It was he, who first contradicted the popular theory that most of the gases could not be liquified, carbonic-acid gas, chlorine, became liquids under the skilful hands of the young physicist. It was he who first demonstrated the truth of the theory that electricity, magnetism and galvanism are modifications of the same mode of motion.

Chlorine had a great fascination for him, though a gas of such poisonous nature, he managed to force it in combination with other elements, and thus form compounds now largely used as disinfectants. During the latter part of his life, Faraday gave considerable attention to perfecting the numerous beacons, bounding the coasts of the British Isles. The electric light was at the time considered a farce, and electricity could by no means be made to give a constant illumination suitable for lighting the dangerous parts of the coasts to the anxious mariner. After many patient trials, he succeeded in improving the light to such an extent, that electricity was the chief agent for illumination on the southern coast of England. He rarely required elaborate apparatus to illustrate his meaning. While sailing up the Thames he happened to observe the foul state of the water. Cutting pieces of cardboard into small strips, and previously netting them to make them sink, he dropped a few at stated intervals over the side of the boat noting the time of disappearance from sight. The next day an astonishing report was made declaring the water of the river very impure and very injurious to the health of those who were unfortunate enough to live upon its banks.

Faraday never would advance a statement until thoroughly convinced that it was a correct one. Mere theories unsupported by facts, he did not believe, no matter how probable they appeared; his researches have proved the truth or demonstrated the falsity of theories advanced by some of the most scientific men of his day. Faraday was a man of great generosity. The extent of his expenditures for charity is not known. But it is recorded that his income, from many sources, amounted to ten or twelve hundred pounds annually, while his personal expenses amounted to but very little, and yet the entire income was disposed of in some unknown way. It has been conjectured that the greater part of this large sum went for charitable purposes. Though he had never passed through an University he was made a member of the Senate of the University of London, a distinction he regarded most highly, ahd he showed his appreciation of this office by a faithful attention to his duties in its behalf. Nor was this the only distinction Faraday received. Honors were showered upon him from all quarters of the civilized world; Germany, France, Italy, England and America strove to rival each other in rendering tribute to him.

Upon the resignation of the President of the Royal Society, Faraday was urged to accept the vacant chair, much against his advisers' wishes he refused, saying, "I must remain plain Michael Faraday to the last." In 1835 an attempt was made to confer upon him with a few others, a government pension of three hundred pounds annually. Hearing of a few insulting remarks, made by the prime minister, Faraday refused the proffered award much to the astonishment of the King and the chagrin of his friends. A few years later, the Queen gave him a home at Hampton Court where he spent the remainder of his days in peace. On the 26th of August, 1867, this good and illustrious life peacefully closed and the memory only survives of which his friends and countrymen should be proud. For whether as a philosopher or in private relations, his character was of a rare kind. His was a life of labor and love, and it leaves a noble model that one may well wish to follow but few can ever hope to rival.

TIRED AND LANGUID WOMEN.—How many women there are of whom these words are true: "They feel languid and tired, hardly able to bear their weight on their feet, the bloom all gone from their cheeks, irritable and cross without meaning to be, nerves all upset, worried with the children, fretted over little things, a burden to themselves, and yet with no acute disease." What a pity it is. But a few bottles of Parker's Tonic will drive all this away, and relieve the troubles peculiar to their sex.

Referring to the "Salvation Army," Puck talks thus sensibly and pointedly: "When people get to that point at which they don't know the difference between religion and a circus, it is fairly safe to conclude that they have left morality clean out of sight. There is a pretty heavy responsibility resting on the shoulders of those regularly ordained ministers of the Gospel who have, by their open approval or by their cowardly silence, aided and abetted these people in their mumming mockery of religion and their defiance of decency and common-sense."

WHAT WILL SURELY DO IT.—One's hair begins to fall out from many causes. The important question is: What is sure to make it grow in again? According to the testimony of thousands, Parker's Hair Balsam will do it. It quickly covers bald spots, restores the original color when the hair is gray or faded, eradicates dandruff, and causes the scalp to feel cool and well. It is not a dye, not greasy, highly perfumed, safe. Never disappoints those who require a nice, reliable dressing.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,

Editors and Publishers.

WE NOTICE that a leading Medical Journal advises that the regular physicians of this State use no further influence towards securing the passage of the law which was proposed in the Legislature this year. It desires that any steps towards such a law should be taken by the people, who, it says, are the most interested, or should be. That is perfectly right. If the doctors leave it just there, according to the advice of that journal, there will be no harm ensue to the State. There has been an attempt in certain quarters, nearly every year within our recollection, to foist a law upon this State forbidding any person, not a member of a regular school of practice, to treat the sick. It has failed every time. And it ought to fail. Doubtless the regular physicians consider specialists, clairvoyants, healers by laying on of hands and faith or mind cure advocates, as quacks and frauds. Perhaps they are. But if people desire to employ them—if they have more faith in their cures than in those of a regularly educated physician,—it will be hard to convince them of their error. No stronger argument before any Committee on this subject was ever presented than that made by Allen Putnam, Esq., formerly of Danvers, before a Legislative Committee some eight years since. There are many people—good respectable citizens whose character no man dare assail, who will not employ a regular physician under any circumstances. And while we may think these people are in error, it would be a more grievous error for the State of Massachusetts to say to them that they shall not employ whom they will to heal them.

The "quacks," so called, are not all outside the regular medical profession. To be a successful physician requires something more than the diploma of a Medical School, or the learning obtained from the books. It requires a knowledge of human nature, and a grasping of the hereditary, constitutional traits of character, as well as symptoms derived from such a source, that can only come from study of human nature itself. We think the majority of successful medical practitioners are inclined to take the advice of the journal to which we have referred, and are perfectly content with their own practice, desiring no special statute to compel the people to employ them. There are physicians whose practice is limited, whose success is somewhat doubtful, who are nettled by lack of patronage, and who are anxious that clairvoyants and others—not regulars—should go. Their anxiety is too transparent.

Medical science, like all others, is progressive. The physician of twenty-five years ago,even with his experience, must be abreast of the time. The close of his study in the schools does not make him a physician in the true sense of the word. He does not by any means know it all. He must study in the future. All his spare time from his practice must be devoted to such study. The physician who cares no more for his patients than the fee for his daily visits, who will not devote time to the study of each case, will not generally succeed. And this ought to be so. The best and only advertisement a good physician needs is to cure his patients—to cure them from a desire to see them well, and to cure them, too, when others have failed.

The true physician, also, like the minister of the gospel, will endear himself to his patients. He will invite their confidence, which he will never, under any circumstances, betray. From his intimate association with the families of his patients, he becomes acquainted with many family secrets. In many cases he stands between life and death, and is frequently called upon to give consolation to the bereaved, and to take the place, to a certain extent, of the pastor. To the true physician this is a duty from which he will never shrink. Such a one will keep the confidence of his patients, and to him there is no such word as fail.

THE SCHOOL Committee, last Monday, gave a second examination for candidates desiring admission to the Peabody High School. We hear it hinted that some of the applicants, who failed of admission at the first examination, were considered as good scholars as any in their classes—hence a second trial.

This action furnishes the best evidence we could wish, in support of the position the PRESS has maintained in regard to these examinations. It is a farce from beginning to end. It is not a correct test of the scholarship of the candidates, or of their ability to pursue the course of study laid out in the High School. There is no reason, in our judgment, why the scholars of the first class in the several grammar schools should not be promoted on the basis of their work in the grammar schools. The masters in these schools know perfectly well who of their scholars are qualified to enter the High School. But whether, under the present system, such ones will pass the examination, is as much of a conundrum, as is the verdict an ordinary jury will render in a doubtful case at law.

The schools of the town of Woburn, for an example, are considered equal, surely, to the average in our State. Their superintendent for many years was called a year ago to a very responsible position in one of our large cities. Their High School graduating exercises have shown a high order of merit. The course of study enables a young man to fit himself entirely for college. Once it was so here. And yet the town of Woburn admits its scholars to the High School by a similar plan to the one we have advocated. We have heard of no ill results following. On the contrary, we think promotion, on the basis of a certain percentage through the year, will give better satisfaction to the scholars, the teachers and the parents.

There is another thing we want to say. We cannot see why the scholars, under the present system, who attain a certain percentage in examinations, should be assigned to the Classical course, and those who fall below it, to the English Course. As if the scholar who passed the best examination will make the best Latin scholar. Perhaps his or her mind runs in the direction of mathematics. As if the scholar, who in the general examination, attained a low average might not make the best scholar in Latin. Perhaps those who are admitted to the Classical Course do not desire to study Latin at all. Possibly those who desire to do so are admitted to the English Course. If we are to have an elective system in the school with reference to the classics, let it be on the basis of the desires of the scholars, or their parents, not on the basis of a certain percentage obtained at the examination. We understand that there have been exceptions made to the rule in some cases. It should all be an exception, or the rule annulled entirely.

THE DISCUSSION in the religious and other journals caused by the arrest and conviction of two well known clergymen of Boston for preaching on the Common, cannot fail to produce salutary results. We have no doubt of the good intentions of the reverend gentlemen. At the same time, it can not be denied that they were violators of a city ordinance — and that, too, after warning had been given them that they would be arrested if they persisted in so violating the law.

At first glance, the arrest looks like persecution. Preaching the gospel has always been considered a privilege which could be exercised under the protection of law. And so it is, in proper places. Yet there is something to be said on the other side. If the reverend gentlemen arrested are allowed to preach, others should be accorded the same liberty without a permit. There is a large latitude to preaching, as it is called, at the present day. A discourse on any sacred theme may be called preaching. It is but a few steps in this direction to the lecture of Bob Ingersoll on " which way."

The legality of the city ordinance is unquestioned, and the opinion of the judge who ordered the jury to find a verdict of guilty is very clear in this respect. Whether such an ordinance is valid, constitutionally, rests with the Supreme Court to decide, and it may be a matter of opinion. Whether it is policy for the city to have such a law among its ordinances is certainly a question of opinion. If it is not right, the enforcement of the law as it exists is the surest way to annul it. Possibly that is what the preachers desired when they posed as martyrs in having themselves arrested. Possibly it is a greater notoriety they sought. At all events there are many preachers of large reputation in Boston, who are content with their own work and would not countenance a violation of the ordinance of the city. The verdict will doubtless settle two things; the ministers will not be likely to preach again on the common without a permit; and the city government will likely be more liberal in granting such permission. After all, the people will rule; and if refusal of permission to respectable clergymen to preach the gospel is carried to an extent of offending a large class in the community who sympathize with them, their voice will be heard in a way the city government can not mistake. We believe, however, in the enforcement of existing law. And we think persistence in its violation, even in such a case, is a great mistake, and one which will re-act on its violators.

THE INSULT to the American flag, July 4th, in Salt Lake City, the home of Mormonism, should not be passed by in silence. When such men as Horace Eldredge, president of the Deseret national bank, the United States depository, says the half mast is the proper place for the flag, "as we have not more than half our rights," it is time our government fully decided to pursue the vigorous policy adopted the past year. The United States has no quarrel with Mormonism as a religious body. It objects to polygamy whether practiced by Mormons or any one else. Until recently no Court in Salt Lake City could convict a polygamist. But lately there have been several convictions and sentences. And recently—our authority is the able correspondent of the Boston Advertiser—the leaders of a sect of Mormons calling themselves Josephites are making considerable inroads into the church. This division of the Mormons do not believe in polygamy. With their aid and that of the government, it may be that polygamy, as countenanced by the church, will not long survive. At this juncture the change of Commissioners in Utah, if such is contemplated by President Cleveland, is a delicate matter. He should see to it that no backward steps are taken in the enforcement of the law as it at present exists.

Mr. D. B. Hagar, principal of State Normal school, remarked at the graduation exercises on Tuesday, that he had rounded out twenty years as principal of that school. We have no hesitation in endorsing what was said by one of the speakers on that occasion, that the twenty years had been years of good and faithful work. The pupils who leave the Normal school are everywhere sought after, and always prove efficient and accomplished teachers. By his gentlemanly and upright manner, Mr. Hagar at once wins the respect and confidence of pupils under his charge, and graduates all unite in the expression of their love and honor for the teacher, who in many ways has made their school days bright, pleasant and profitable ones. We hope that the present principal may long be spared to occupy the position in which he has labored so long and so well.—Observer.

Yesterday the Empire State was chartered by the united Universalists of Boston and vicinity for a trip to Marblehead, where the passengers were allowed to land and remain several hours. The steamer has been newly fitted and put in thorough repair, and will make trips daily from Battery Wharf at 10 A.M. for the North Shore, Provincetown, and all the trips so well known to our readers. This year a reduction in price has been made—gents 75 cts., ladies 50 cts., so that a man can go with his wife or "best girl" for a little more than what he paid last year for himself.

How strange; but we want money. Owing to sickness we have not collected our bills very promptly of late, but propose to be right after them now. Our friends will greatly aid us by dropping in and settling their small accounts. Now don't all come at once, because we might get reckless and rush into speculation. Neither do we want to pay all our creditors at once for fear it will make a commotion in financial circles by throwing so much money on the market at one time. But lay away the amount of our bill and either hand it into the office or to our collector who will be around.

We would like to notice the enterprise of two of our exchanges. The Amesbury News, one of the brightest little exchanges on our list, furnished its readers with a fine engraving of the old centennial Rocky Hill church, on the occasion of its recent celebration of its anniversary. Then there was the old reliable Hampshire County Journal, whose editor painted the paper red, white and blue with printer's ink last Saturday, in honor of the glorious Fourth.

THE SOLDIERS HOME.

Among the many pleasant drives in the vicinity of Washington is the one to the Soldiers Home. The grounds which comprise some 500 acres, are situated on high ground and overlook the city, The grounds are systematically laid out, and within the enclosure are seven miles of driveway, beautifully shaded with gigantic oak trees, and broken at intervals with cultivated fields and broad meadows. So diversified is the scenery that one hardly realizes he is not in some grand public park, built in former ages, instead of the peaceful and quiet home of six hundred or more disabled veterans of the regular army, who enjoy its comforts, after the eventful scenes in their coutry's service. The main building is of white marble and has a frontage of 200 feet, a wing 60 feet, and is two stories high with a tower in the center. In close proximity are the numerous cottages occupied by the officers, and near the main building is the cottage of the President of the United States, and it is the least pretentious one of them all. This has been the summer home of our Presidents since Buchanan who was the first to occupy it. A short distance away is a capacious hospital, with broad piazzas, from which a fine view of Washington and the Potomac can be had. On the brow of the hill, stands a life size bronze statue of General Scott and from this elevation the vista of the dome of the Capitol makes a long to be remembered picture, while all around is a scene of beauty and sublimity, and we almost envied these old veterans their possessions.

MEMORIAL DAY AT ARLINGTON.

Had we the space we would like to describe our journey from Washington to Arlington, and speak of the vehicle pressed into service for the occasion, drawn by four mules driven by a colored driver, (it was a cross between a horse car and a herdic) how we journeyed across aqueduct bridge,with its old fashioned toll house, where we were stopped until the two cents demanded was paid, how the wheels of our chariot sunk deep in the yellow mud or sacred soil of " Old Virginia," of the pleasant company with us, of the negro huts along the road side and of the many pleasant and humorous instances of that trip, but we have not the room. The Arlington estate consists of 160 acres, and was the property of Gen. Robert E. Lee, till the breaking out of the rebellion, when he removed to Richmond, and it was confisicated by the government, Congress afterwards paying the heirs to the estate, $150,000 for the property. About 200 acres are reserved for the cemetery, and here nearly 17,000 of our Nation's dead find their last resting place, shaded by ancient trees, and marked by a small white marble stone on which is enscribed as far as known, the names, company, regiment and state to which they belonged. Some distance away is a large vault containing the bones of 2,211 unknown soldiers gathered from the different battle fields. The spot is marked by a large granite sarcophagus, with four field pieces and numerous piles of cannon balls. The old mansion still remains. It is built of brick covered with stucco, resembling freestone, the portico in front supported by eight immense columns. The lower story is open to the inspection of visitors. In close proximity are the old slave quarters and the kitchen. Employed on the place is a Mr. Syphax, who was born on the place and was a slave. He is now 57 years of age, and will impart a deal of information to visitors, concerning his old master.

There is a large amphitheater built by the government some twelve years ago, and under a canvas cover amidst the fragrance of flowers and a profusion of flags and bunting the memorial services were held. It seems to be very fitting that the home of that great rebel leader, Robert E. Lee, should be used as the last resting place for a union soldier and a place when he comes to that silent journey that he can claim from his country no matter where in this broad domain he may live. And as we stood among those long parallel rows of silent marble and saw loving hands strew flowers over the graves of those historic dead, the thought impressed itself upon us that there could be no more simple and fitting manner of commemorating their bravery than this method of meeting at the grave where these treasures of the nation are gathered, "each in his windowless palace of rest" and there tendering our offerings from Nature for the unreturning brave. The procession was somewhat of a novel nature and was headed by the famous Marine Band, followed by members of the Grand Army, the invited guests and then the colored Posts of the Grand Army, and in the rear came hundreds of ladies bearing flowers in baskets and inverted umbrellas, and followed by many of the orphan children of soldiers. All halted around the tomb of the unknown which had been beautifully decorated. Flowers in garlands and worked in various designs were disposed about the monument in a most effective manner. Four posts were erected so as to form a square about the tomb and these were wrapped in bunting and exergreen. Garlands of evergreen and roses were suspended from post to post. Upon the top of the monument was placed a large shield of flowers on which the inscription "Our Heroes" was wrought. A mammoth star of roses and daises was placed on one side, on another was a large cross made from rich-hued jacqueminot roses and on the other sides were wreaths and other flowers made up in tasteful designs. While the band played a dirge all stood with uncovered heads, then prayer was offered by the chaplain. The procession then moved to the main road and separated to decorate those 17,000 graves not one of whom was forgotten. During the ceremony of decoration the Band rendered appropriate selections from the center of the silent camping ground. The procession was again formed and marched to the amphitheater, where the usual memorial day services were held. The orator was Hon. S. S. Burdette who has since been elected Commander in Chief of the Grand Army of the United States. The amphitheater is surrounded by a row of columns with flowering vines entwined about them and on this occasion flags, shields, baskets of flowers, and patriotic emblems were suspended among them and garlands of evergreen were stretched from pillar to pillar. The services were conducted by the Department of the Potomac.

"On fames eternal camping ground their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn round the bivouac of the dead."

MOUNT VERNON.

As long as this Union shall exist the name of Washington will be revered, and the home where he lived and the tomb where repose his ashes will ever be held in remembrance by a grateful people. Taking the steamer W. W. Corcoran we are soon sailing gracefully along the muddy waters of the Potomac. Passing the shady grounds of the Arsenal, out into the stream either side of which presents a changing scene, a short stop is made at Alexandria and a view obtained of its grass grown streets and large ware houses fronting the river, that are now going to decay. We have pointed out to us the old hotel, from the flag staff of which the brave Ellsworth pulled the rebel flag and the next moment met his death. Here also may be seen the old church in which Washington worshipped and the pew in which he sat. After a pleasant ride of fourteen miles we reach the landing at Mount Vernon, where we are met by a guide who conducts the party up a plank walk to a vault made of brick with a high iron gate in front. Looking through these bars you see on each side a marble sarcophagus of similar design, and these our guide tells us, after looking around to see if all the party had arrived, contain the remains of George Washington and "Martha, Consort of Washington." The guide says his piece with such a solemn look that you almost wish you had brought an onion to start the tears. From the tomb we proceed to the Mount Vernon mansion. Here the party were asked to register their names, and after they had been translated to the inquisitive guide we were shown around the home of the "Father of his Country" which by the way is so well preserved one can scarcely realize that more than a hundred years had passed since it was occupied by its owner. The guide rushes us along at such a rapid rate that it is impossible to more than glance in a room before you pass to the next. We left the guide on the first landing and did our own investigating. Most of the rooms were furnished with antique furniture, portraits and relics of former days. In a small room in the second story is George Washington's bed-chamber and the bedstead on which he died is still in the room. It is made of mahogany and has four high posts, the windows are hung with modern draperies, and a crazy patchwork quilt or something as modern covers the bed. One has to imagine George surrounded by all these beautiful things calmly waiting the summons of our Great Master. Could the spirit of Martha Washington return to that attic chamber, where from the small window she is said to have laid and watched the old tomb where her husband was buried, and where none were allowed to see her except a servant, two grand children and the family cat, for the convenience of which one corner of the door was cut away—could she return to that room in which she died would, she recognize above the old mahogany washstand the beautiful outline splasher, and beside the old-fashioned high post bed, would she feel at home in that finely upholstered easy chair? And yet a visitor is supposed to believe that this room and its surroundings represent the taste and refinement of Mrs. Washington. Pass to the banquet hall or state-parlor, where our first President was wont to drink the health of noted men in his day; where the grand banquets with Lafayette, Rechambeau, and our own distinguished statesmen was always held; think of all these people turning to a large picture entitled, "Washington at Yorktown," occupying nearly one side of the room. Wouldn't they think him a little egotistical? Think of him sitting in one of the easy chairs of the Wakefield Rattan Company, toasting his shins on a modern grate at an open fire place. All this is shown in the room that is supposed to be just as he left it.

And so we might go on through the house; the rooms are all furnished with a mixture of antique and modern furniture so arranged as to either spoil the effect or cause the visitor to draw largely on his imagination. There was one room that looked as if it might have been kept just as it was left by the family; it was on the rear of the house and was a kind of pantry with the old shelves still in position. In the rear are numerous other buildings used for different purposes, and among them is a museum on a small scale; in it is the identical melodion Washington gave his adopted daughter on her wedding day, (perhaps history has never spoken of this before.) Here also is a hatchet supposed to be the one that chopped the celebrated cherry tree. This must be wholly a supposition, as it would take a good sized man to swing the axe at the present time. Everything about the place are family relics, or some way identified with the family. We were prepared to stand a good deal, but it was about the last straw that broke us up, when they presented a rusty, emaciated maltese cat and told us it was a direct descendant of the handsome feline pet of Martha Washington. We could but feel that the race had greatly degenerated. The grounds surrounding the mansion are kept in excellent condition and from the well worn flag stone piazza can be obtained an excellent view of the Potomac, which is very wide at this point. On the premises is the original tomb of Washington and also the old ice house, both of which are of interest to visitors. Mount Vernon is under the charge of the "Ladies' Mount Vernon Associates of the Union," and only one river boat is allowed to land passengers there. A fare of $1 for a round trip is charged on the boat and thirty-four cents of this goes to the association, and is used in having the place well cared for. A journey to Washington would hardly be complete without a visit to Mount Vernon.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The officers of Holten Lodge I. O. O. F. were installed last evening by Past District Deputy N. A. Verry and suite. Previous to the installation, the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were read, showing that the lodge had a membership of 173; had received during the past six months $1578.88; and had paid for relief $630. The lodge has a fund at the present time of $5135., 48. The officers installed were as follows: N. G., John McDonald; V. G., George B. Miller in place of C. S. Batchelder resigned; R. S. N. G., S. S. Littlefield; L. S. N. G., James Buxton; Warden, George A. Lawrence; Conductor, George H. Manning; O. G., Daniel A. Goodrich; I. G., Charles E. Galeucia; R. S. S., William T. Gunn; L. S. S., George D. Hill; R. S. V. G.- E. B. Balcomb; L. S. V. G. George B. Chandler; Chaplain, Wm. A. Saunders. After speeches by the grand officers the brothers adjourned to Baldwin's new hotel, where the tables were elegantly spread and the first "set down" in the new dining room was enjoyed. After doing justice to the refreshments the company adjourned to the parlors, and several inspected the hotel. About eleven o'clock the company broke up.

News has been received of the death last Friday at Jackson, Mich., of Henry W. Moulton, formerly a resident of this town. Mr. Moulton was born in Peabody, and after leaving the High School he was employed in the tanning business by the old firm of Franklin Upton & Co., on Foster street, with whom he worked until he enlisted for the war. He was mustered in to the 39th Reg't. Massachusetts Volunteers, Aug. 12, 1862. He was a good soldier and was promoted to the rank of 1st Lieutenant. He was discharged for disability Dec. 5, 1864. On his return home he remained in town some years, but removed West on account of his health. He married the eldest daughter of William H. Harrington, who with two daughters survive him. He was connected with the Bortree Manufacturing Co., an extensive manufactory of corsets, with headquarters in New York City. His age was 44 years.

The Fourth passed quietly in town, the boys who were out all night behaved very well and most of our residents got a good night's sleep, (something unusual). The special police, including Big Dennis, had an opportunity to wear a badge and run after the hoodlums. About two o'clock the firing of guns was permitted and at sunrise the bells were rung and the flag of our country hoisted to the top of the flag staff, while the firemen of the brick house fired a salute at the Soldiers' Monument. There were several private displays of fire works and the annual shower in the evening. It was quite a day after all and those who didn't go away stayed at home, and all had a good time.

Sixteen children from the summer home excursions arranged by the Young Men's Christian Union, of Boston, arrived in town Monday, to be cared for by the Young Workers of the Unitarian Society of this town for a couple of weeks. They will make their home here with Mrs. D. B. Lord, Mrs. Culliton, Mrs. Allen, Mrs. Campbell of Lynnfield, Mrs. Arthur W. Littlefield, Mrs. J. P. King, Mrs. J. W. Hudson, Mrs. Dalton, Mrs. Frank Trask. Seven of the children are boys; and five are the same who were here last year, by special request.

The Methodist Sunday schools of Peabody, Danvers, Salem, Beverly, Marblehead and other neighboring towns will unite in a grand picnic, at Garrison Hill and the Observatory, at Dover, N. H., to-morrow, July 9. Round trip tickets from Peabody will be sold to adults for $1.00. The place to be visited is spoken very highly of, and as this is the first long trip ever attempted by the Society in this town a large number should attend. The extremely low fares would seem to be a guarantee of a large party.

The Essex Institute will hold its first field meeting of the season at Nantasket beach, to-morrow. Cars leave Salem at 8.13 A. M. for Boston. From Rowe's wharf in that city, they will go in a steamer to the Beach, leaving at 9.30 A. M. Should Thursday be decidedly stormy the excursion will take place the next day. Tickets must be procured at the Institute rooms, Plummer Hall, Salem, before next Thursday.

We learn that there has been a suit brought against the Fay estate by the Board of Health on account of damage to our water supply at Spring pond, by a drain into it from these premises. This seems to be a counter suit to the $50,000 one brought by the Fay estate to recover damages for injury to their property by improvements made by the Water Board.

Salem band came up on the horse car and gave us a short concert last night.

Eighty in the shade at seven o'clock this morning.

The Baptists will picnic at Chebacco Pond to-morrow.

Mr. James Howley will probably sail for Europe the 18th.

The verdure of the fields has been restored by the frequent showers.

Mr. A. A. Messer has taken a leather store on Lincoln street, Boston.

Miss Kittie Wiley has accepted the position in the Center school as teacher.

Peabody's share of the state tax this year is about $2000 less than last year.

Since the Fourth the streets have looked as if they needed a thorough sweeping.

Richard Barry has bought the Townsend estate on Tremont street on private terms.

Mr. Sam. G. Southwick is driving a horse car for the Naumkeag Street Railroad Company.

To-day about three hundred from this town attended the Universalist picnic at Centennial Grove.

The school committee have voted to paint the high school house and make necessary repairs in the others.

The estate of the late John Dodge on Park street was sold at auction last Monday to Mrs. Martha J. Dodge for $3350.

The horse belonging to Daniel Brown, that was burned at the fire recently, was killed last Friday to end his sufferings.

The tracks of the Peabody & Danvers railroad have been cleared and it is expected it will be in running operation by to-morrow.

Mr. Calvin Pierce is fencing in for the Upton estate the vacant lot on Foster street adjoining Col. C. T. Batchelder's residence.

Mr. A. B. Clark is building an addition to the Walnut street end of his factory about 20 feet square. Calvin Pierce is doing the work.

Miss Flavia M. Goodwin and Lillian M. Tudbury, recent graduates of the high school, will take a course of study at Salem Normal School.

The old buildings on the site of the new Baptist parsonage, were sold at auction yesterday, and the house was bought by Stephen F. Blaney for $160 and will be removed to the land in the rear of Essex Block. The story and a half shop was bought by Chas A. Thomas for $17. The number two shed was bought by Samuel Trask for three dollars. The long building on the Clement lot sold to Henry Wilson for $20. The cost to build the building originally was $240. Shed number five was bought by Dr. Worcester for five dollars. Chas. Odell was auctioneer.

Mr. George R. Norton is now comfortably settled in his new store on Walnut street. The old Burnham stable would hardly be recognized in its present improved condition. This work of transformation has been done by Calvin Pierce, A. W. Berry and N. M. Quint under the direction of Mr. Norton. Large show windows are placed in both sides of the front entrance on Walnut street, making almost a whole glass front. On entering the store, on the left is a small room fitted for glassware, lamps, tin ware, cake boxes, baking pans, silver plated knives, forks, spoons etc. The main room contains the stoves, furnaces, ranges, etc., in which Mr. Norton does a large business. Among them is the Good News, Bastow and the New Tariff. something new which well repay our lady readers to inspect, as a number 7 range has as large an oven as a number 8 of other styles. Here also are exhibited the Garland and Golden Star Oil Stoves, which he makes a specialty. The Winthrop furnace is also handled by this firm. In the rear are two rooms, one used as a workshop, in which are all the latest improvements in machinery and stock for doing first class work. In the other room is kept duplicate grates, stove linings, second hand stoves etc. In the rear is an elevator conveniently arranged, and the upper portion of the building is used for storing of stoves, there being accommodations for five hundred or more. Mr. Norton has a fine store, and would be pleased to see his friends in his new quarters.

Now is the time to visit the great artistic attraction, "The Battle of Gettysburg," at No. 541 Tremont street. It is a work that no one should fail of seeing. It is on exhibition daily from 9 a. m. to 11 p. m., and the price of admission for adults is only 50 cents, and children are admitted at half price.

The disagreeable feature of the Point of Pines has been the rather poor quality of the drinking water, and the management have at last overcome that objection by laying some three miles of pipe to the Revere springs water reservoir, and recently that water was turned on to the entire property, so that guests can now be supplied with probably the best drinking water in the country.

Boston, January 1, 1885.—1 y

The Motley Household.

An Indian lad of a wilful turn,
With old Geneskund had coaxed to stay,
And one of the sort that can never earn
On earth a tithe of their passage way.
A dog there came by the name of Nix,
A low-bred cur with some naughty tricks;
One night at the door such a howling made
That they let him in and thereafter he stayed.
A puss claimed shelter, one grown so fat
She scarcely would more than muse of rat,
Luxuriously stupid, old, and dozy.
Of the feathered sort, a hen had brood
From Partridge eggs brought from the wood,
And a pet crow, very mean and tame,
To the faintest call of "Cansard" came,
And they cut the string in his ugly throat
Enabling it to utter some things by rote.
This motley group of the creatures, told,
Laid claim to place in the chief's household.
Perched the hen in the hut o'erhead in a corner,
Forsaken by dutiless bantams that scorn her,
And strayed from her covert there soon was a thinning;
The owl and the fox went directly to sinning.
The crow had a place o'er the window to croak,
And was always alarmed in the presence of smoke.
The cat on the left and the dog on the right
Of the chimney-place snored till break of the light,
And at just such a time (I should say about six),
Uneasy grew puss and uneasy grew Nix.
Chief Grueskund slept, with his indolent lad,
On some skins of deer and the raccoon they had.
At their meals, which were frugal though never quite scant,
The cat 'gan to purr, and the dog 'gan to pant,
The hen came to cluck, and the mean crow to croak,
While oft in the babel the room filled with smoke.

—From "Geneskund."

Two Days.

All sudden yesterday were sea and sky;
A road perhaps, beyond the strand—not more—
The straining eye could dimly pierce. The roar
Of reefs unseen died in a sullen sigh.
Crept shuddering back ships that would blast defy;
In shrouds close, wet and chill they hugged the shore,
While momently, that waste of waters o'er,
The deep-mouthed fog-horn poured a moaning cry.

To-day the merry moon with glorious flight,
Wheels up the jocund East and gilds the deep.
The ships of yesterday, aglow with light,
Crowd on full sail, their seaward courses deep;
And I, I gaze with glad but baffled sight,
That from such boding gloom such life can leap.

—Author of "Rhymes of a Barrister."

By Light of Nature.

Howe'er their transmigration may deceive,
Atom and force, 'tis said, do not grow old,
But through the circuit of their changes rolled,
New forms, new powers, apparent loss retrieve,
As God would let his senseless tools achieve
Immortal days by virtue of his hold.
Then, when a loving memory doth unfold
That higher, finer force, whose forms could weave
A vanquished life—a nobly tempered will,
Sweet ardor feeding ceaseless industry,
That yet could sink in patience strong and still—
Can I believe God's wise economy
Would husband ever slight electric thrill
Yet let that priceless spirit blankly die?

—M. E. Bennett.

A Cobra Acts as Nurse.

The cobra is not generally credited with kindly feelings toward humanity; on the contrary, it has the reputation of being almost the equal of the hamadryad in misanthropy. Perhaps, however, it frames the same charge against man, on the ground that whenever it crosses his path he invariably seeks its life. From an interesting incident which occurred lately at Pudupet, in the Madras Presidency, it appears that there are some cobras, at all events, who experience a yearning for more friendly relations with the human race. An English lady, returning to her house after the evening's drive, was horrified on entering the nursery to see a huge cobra, with expanded hood, rearing itself over her sleeping infant.

The reptile did not attempt, however, to harm the baby, but contented itself with softly hissing as it moved its head slowly to and fro. Clearly it must have watched the nurse when putting the child to sleep, and sought, in its humble way, to execute a lullaby with the proper accompaniments. On an alarm being raised the serpent made off in haste, but without taking even a nibble at the little one. Perhaps it was just as lucky that the latter did not awake; a baby in full cry has been known before now to provoke even human beings to wrath.—London Globe.

Burdette's Fish Story.

I remember once, myself fishing in the eddying waters of the Mississippi, about four miles above Burlington, striking a catfish. I was using a lancewood rod and set reel, and the fish ran out about twenty-five yards of line, then turning suddenly made straight for me as I stood in the water. I struck at it with the rod, which broke in my hand. The infuriated fish chased me ashore, ran me through a lumber-yard, pursued me across a wide stubble field, and some distance into the woods, when, being unarmed, I climbed a large cottonwood tree. The relentless fish followed me up the tree, where it was shot by some hunters just as it was "cooning" out upon a big limb to get at me. It fell to the ground dead, shot through the heart. It was nine inches long and weighed a pound and a half with its clothes on. Which by interpretation is dressed.

A Perfect Preservation.

Mr. Runaround was out late the other night, and the next morning at breakfast, in order to "justify" himself, he remarked to his wife:

"Pet, we have been married twenty years, and you look almost as young as you did then."

"You have not changed a particle," she responded sweetly.

"Not changed!" he answered in surprise, remembering his gray locks and ruby nose. "Why, how can you say that?"

"Because things preserved in alcohol never change," she answered.

Mr. R. buttered his napkin-ring under the impression that it was a muffin, and the meal progressed in silence.—Washington Hatchet.

Pressure on the ears is to be avoided by persons who wish to preserve their sense of hearing. Narrowing of the auditory canal by the pressure of a handkerchief worn over the head and tied under the chin, as it is commonly adjusted by the peasant women of Europe, often causes deafness; and the cornette of the nuns, pressing tightly against the pavilion of the ear, frequently produces the same effect.

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

☞Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

KEEP IT PURE.

THE LIFE IS THE BLOOD—PREVENT DISEASE —SURGERY THE LAST RESORT—A TELLING LETTER.

Here is a fact for you to think over, viz.: Medical science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety they seem to have, proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints —some of them appearing almost directly opposite in their natures. When a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. But, while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.

It is conceded that DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "FAVORITE REMEDY" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from Cancer.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., March 22, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home, I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system, too, required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly commended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result surprised me, it was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since the "FAVORITE REMEDY," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that.

Yours, etc.,

MATTHEW FARRELL.

24 Adams Street.

In all cases when a consultation is deemed desirable.

Address. Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. But, if you have not done so, adopt "FAVORITE REMEDY" as a household friend.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

FAVORITE REMEDY

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5. by all druggists.

ASTERS,

— AT —

WARD'S GREENHOUSES,

Cor. Endicott and Warren Sts., Peabody.

I did not meet Viola de Sanza years ago.

He had utterly forgotten Glenmore, then. If he had only remembered that, she might have had some pity, but now—

Guy, you are sure you love me. No other woman in the world but me?

No other, so help me heaven, he answered solemnly. Viola, when will you be my wife?

I will give you my answer tomorrow; I will write.

He could not induce her to say more on the subject. But when he was leaving she crossed the room swiftly, and placing her white arms around his neck kissed him passionately. They were the first she had ever given him, and they riveted forever the chains of love with which she had fettered him.

* * * * *

To-morrow! To-morrow! Would it never come. He paced his room all the night through, and the tomorrow came so slowly, he counted the hours—but they had never seemed to be such long hours before. But they must elapse before he could receive the promised letter. Had he known what a letter it would be, and how it would blight his life forever, he would gladly have died before it reached him.

At last it came, he snatched it and imprinted a kiss upon the superscription over and over; then he opened it, and out fell the old letter he had sent to the nice little girl at Glenmore. It bore across the bottom in her clear handwriting these words:

I have bided my time. As I suffered then, you must suffer now, it will harden you for the world. This is the end.

MADGE HEATHCOTE.

Otherwise, VIOLA DE SANZA

That was all—no, not all—for at his feet laid two cards—wedding cards—bearing the names of Sir Maurice Conway and Miss Madge Heathcote. This was her revenge.

Book Notices.

The July number of the Magazine of American History commences the 14th volume of this excellent magazine. The number contains the opening chapters of its series of War Studies, containing seven instructive and entertaining papers on events at the beginning of the war. The frontispiece is a portrait of President Lincoln. Among the short papers is one of much interest on President Buchanan, by Hon. Horatio King. The seven standing departments are splendidly sustained, and the entire number is one of the most readable and attractive ever issued. 50 cents a number; $5 a year in advance. 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

St. Nicholas for July has very properly a decidedly patriotic flavor. The number opens with an interesting sketch by Edward Eggleston, entitled A School of Long Ago. In Washington's First Correspondence we can read the first letter ever written by the Father of his Country; Among the Lawmakers contains an instructive and entertaining description of the organization of our national government; in the Letterbox are some spirited verses describing the heroic act of Elizabeth Zane, a brave American girl of the olden time; and in A School Afloat, Ensign Gibbons, of the Navy, and Charles Barnard explain how patriotic American boys are made into practical American sailors. The papers on The Children of the Cold, Historic Girls, and From Bach to Wagner, each have readable and interesting installments. There are numerous short stories and poems, and the serial stories all continue to increase in interest.

THE HOT WEATHER.—Of mid-summer has a weakening effect, both upon body and mind. You feel absolutely incapable of doing any arduous work, and even light duties are performed languidly and unwillingly. This low state of the system causes even greater infirmity, and gives opportunity for serious disease to gain a foot-hold. In this condition the system is quick to respond to the reviving quickening, and strengthening effects of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies the blood, regulates the digestive organs, and infuses fresh life and vigor into every portion of the body. People who have taken it write us, saying: "It puts new life right into me." "It makes me young again." Reader, if you suffer from summer weakness, try Hood's Sarsaparilla. 100 doses $1.

The Traveller says: "It comes to us from an excellent source, that the negotiations for the control of the Passumpsic road by the Boston & Lowell Company under a lease, are well advanced and likely to be consummated at an early date. The purchase of the southeastern line when the same is sold under foreclosure will be the only remaining step to be taken to secure the long desired through line to Montreal under what is practically one management."

SPARKS.

Sunday morning a report was circulated around town, coming from Salem, that a large fire was raging in Boston, and that the whole of Friend street was in flames. This had the effect of starting quite a delegation of the Peabody fire sharps to the city, post haste, only to find upon their arrival, that they had been sold, as the department had not been out since the night before, when a fire occurred at the corner of Washington and Union streets. It was then decided to visit some of the different headquarters, and accordingly the house of engine No. 8 was the first one arrived at. This engine is located on Salem street, and like most of the quarters in Boston is well fitted with all the appliances for a prompt response to a call. Upon introducing ourselves to Capt. Childs of No. 8, we were given a good opportunity to inspect the quarters thoroughly. Located at this house is a steamer and four wheeled hose carriage. The engine is the old Northern Liberty, built by Jeckett & Freeman in 1869 and has had a part new boiler put on it within the past three or four years. It is a handsome machine, every part polished as bright as solid rubbing will make it. The hose carriage was of the Amoskeag pattern. The horses are directly at the rear of the apparatus, facing in, and when an alarm comes in, the doors in front of the horses fly open and they take their places under the swing harnesses, which are pulled down and snapped into position by the men on the floor, the driver, under new rules the foreman generally drives, takes his seat, pulls the tassel for the doors which swing open and the machine is out and away in less time than it takes to tell it, if it is in their district, if not they remain hitched and on the floor for twenty minutes to await a second alarm. If none is pulled in within that time, the horses are put back in the stalls and the men go to their beds or the smoking room, all except the patrol of whom there are two on all night, one on the street and one on the floor. Every man attached to a permanent company is obliged to take his turn on patrol or on the floor. The horses of No. 8 are a handsome pair of bays, very stocky, weighing about 1250 apiece, and have been in the service for many years. The hose horse is a large and powerful roan, new to the service, but rapidly breaking in. The Sullivan patent swing harness is in use in this house on the steamer, while the Berry collar is used on the hose carriage, but the Sullivan system of hanging the harness is used. The harnesses being suspended from six ropes with trip hooks attached, which drops the harness upon the pulling of one rope. The City of Boston have purchased the rights to manufacture their own harnesses. On the floor above the engine room is the bunk room, containing eleven iron bedsteads, neatly made up, and upon some of them were reposing the tired firemen who had had a busy day of it on the 4th, having had ten alarms in the twenty-four hours, two of them being good sized fires. The captain's room opens off of the bunk room, and was a neat and cosy little place. Off from this floor is the hay loft with the hose tower passing through it. Above the bunk room is the smoking room with a storeroom opening from it. Upon the flat roof of the stable, which was reached through a window, was the coats and boots of the firemen, put out to dry. In the corner of the bunk room is the sliding pole, a piece of two inch brass tubing leading through a hole in the floor below, by which the firemen reach the engine room, saving time and labor. There are twelve men in all stationed at this house. The house, like all the engine houses is supplied with the apparatus for receiving and locating an alarm, independent of the big alarm bells, and in fact the alarm is received in the fire stations a little quicker than the bells begin to strike. Thanking the genial captain for his courtesies, the ferry was crossed to East Boston and No. 9's house inspected. This company consists of eleven men in all, Captain, Enginemen, Assistant Enginemen, hosemen and drivers, and is under the charge of Capt. E. B. Smith. The arrangements are similar to all the other houses. A Hunneman steamer and Hunneman hose carriage is located in this house. The driver of the hose carriage is M. A. Bailey, an old veteran in the service, being now in his twentieth year at that station. He is over 65 years of age but says "that when the tapper strikes for their boxes that he is at least 20 years younger." There are four handsome horses in the stable, one for the use of District Engineer Dunbar, whose carriage stands, with a swing harness attached, in an annex to the engine house. Your scribe is greatly indebted to Capt. Smith and Driver Bailey for courtesies extended at this station. The next visit was to the house of Engine 11 and H. & L. 2 on Meridian street. The engine at this house is the John S. Damrell, a harp tank Amoskeag, and the first hose wagon ever built for the Boston department, is in service here. It is not as handsome as the Peabody wagon but is as serviceable, having been in use for four years with only slight repairs. In the oppcsite side of the building is H. & L. 2. a heavy looking piece of apparatus carrying ladders about 65 feet long, battering rams, hooks and all the appurtenances of a first class truck. The sleeping rooms, sliding poles, electric apparatus and all are about the same in all the houses. In all the stations a hearty reception was accorded us and many favors granted. Proceeding to the B. R. R. & L. depot a train was taken for Lynn and the horse cars for Peabody. If we did not see a big fire we saw the apparatus for extinguishing one and will long remember the day's trip.

The screeching of the chime whistle on the mill of B. & A. N. Jacobs and the ringing of the bells at 1.55 o'clock on the morning of the Fourth called the firemen to Oak street, where fire had been discovered on the back of the old tannery building, owned by the I. B. Elliott estate, and used as a storehouse, but at the time of the fire was not occupied. The fire burned a strip about two feet wide from the ground to the roof and was evidently the work of an incendiary. Hose 1 put a stream on and soon had the fire all out. Steamer 1 and Hose 2 also laid lines. Hose 5 with their new wagon was down. No insurance. Loss trifling. Engineer Johnson was acting chief and had charge of the fire.

At the meeting of the Selectmen held last Friday, Horace A. Southwick was appointed an Engineer for the vacancy caused by the removal from town of Wm. J. Roome. The choice is a very good one, and gives general satisfaction. The new engineer has been in the department for a number of years, having served in the same position, assistant foreman in the old Torrent hand engine. He is a morocco dresser, carrying on business on Lowell street above Endicott. He is a successful business man, and stands very high in the estimation of his neighbors and townspeople. The Board of Engineers will meet this evening and reorganize by the election of a new chief, and it is thought that assistant engineer Tibbetts will be elected to that position. He has had the most experience of any man on the Board in fire department matters in this town.

Mr. Southwick resigned his office and gave up his certificate in H. & L. No. 1, and on Monday night A. A. Carleton was elected assistant foreman in his place, and William Connors was elected to the vacancy in the company.

Last Thursday noon at about 12.10 o'clock fire was discovered in the stuffing loft in the fourth story of T. E. Proctor's currying shop. It had gained considerable headway, beginning in a lot of clothing which was hanging on a post, and ran up to the ceiling burning quite a piece before it was extinguished. The sashes of a window near by were burned breaking the glass. A coat and pair of pants belonging to one of the employes were distroyed. The theory was that the fire started from matches in the pockets of the coat, but the owner of the coat denies having any about him or his clothes. A stand pipe with hose attached was near the fire but in the excitement they were not thought of, a common case in mills and factories which are thus provided. Had the fire got a little more headway it would have been pretty serious, as the loft, and in fact the whole building, is full of combustibles and would have spread the fire before the arrival of the department. As it was it was a very fortunate escape.

The following is the copy of one of the by-laws of Gen. Foster Engine Company in April, 1844.

Article 10. "Any member who may be found smoking a pipe or cigar in or about the engine house, shall pay a fine of twenty-five cents."

At the present day, either the rule or the firemen would have to be struck out.

The Board of Engineers will hold their regular meeting this evening.

Steamer 2 has been provided with a length of 2 1-2 inch suction hose for use on hydrants.

The train which left Peabody for Boston at 10.33 this forenoon struck a team driven by William Chase of Salem, at the Carltonville crossing, wrecking the buggy and killing Mr. Chase instantly. The horse was also badly injured. Mr. Chase was for many years Chief Engineer of the Salem fire department and has always taken a great interest in fire matters. At the fire at the Franklin building on the 21st of Oct., 1860., Chief Chase had his right ankle broken by the falling of the walls and has been lame from the effects ever since. Steamer No. 1 of Salem was named in his honor. Mr. Chase was a member of the Society of Friends and was clerk of the Society. He resided at No. 22 Federal street, and was about 76 years of age. The team belonged to Job Hanson, which fact gave rise to the report that it was that gentleman who was killed.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Among the victims of the Mrs. M. A. Davidson swindle was the blind piano-tuner, Michael J. Herlihy, who is a loser to the extent of some two hundred dollars. His case excites special sympathy because of his physical misfortune.

The Arlington Quartette has been formed under the direction of Geo. W. Want, which have already secured a number of engagements the coming season. It consists of Miss Lizzie Webb Cary, soprano; Miss Gertrude Edmunds, contralto; Mr. George W. Want, tenor, and Mr. Harry Cornell basso. Their concerted music will be sung without notes and without accompaniment, after the style of the male quartettes, and as each member of the quartette is also a soloist of much note, they will be able to give an entire evening's entertainment. Their success is assured from the start.

A musicale will be given at the North Church on Thursday afternoon next at four o'clock, by Miss Carrie Martin, Charles A. Clark, organist, assisted by Mrs. E. R. Bigelow, soprano. The programme includes selections from Bach, Roeder, Volckmar, Merkel, Lemmons, Calkin, Rink, Whiting, Wagner, Cherubini, and Guilmant. The public are most cordially invited to be present.

The Musical Record for July has a duet composed by John Barnett, entitled "Moonlight Love and Flowers," five pages; "The Bread Winner" by Cotsford Dick; and "Life on the Ocean Wave," arranged as a waltz by Louis Meyer. This monthly is edited by Dexter Smith, and published by O. Ditson & Co., Boston, at $1 a year.

William J. Winch is summering at Beverly Farms.

The date on which the eagerly anticipated promenade concerts in Boston Music Hall, under the direction of Mr. Ad. Neuendorff, are to be inaugurated will soon be announced. The preparations are going along finely, and Music Hall has been transformed into a bower of beauty. The programme that will be offered will be of that same delightful character which has done so much towards making the Music Hall "Pops" so remarkably successful.

The promenade concerts given in the foyer of the Boston Museum, between seven and eight o'clock, are very popular, and the curiosity hall is crowded during that time.

Mr. Charles L. Capen, of Boston, read an essay before the Music Teachers' annual Convention in New York, last week. Mr Capen is the Musical critic in the Boston Home Journal.

Miss Howard, of the South Church, Salem, is expected to sing contralto at the Unitarian Church during this month.

The choir of Grace Church, Salem, will not sing again there, on account of the death of Dr. Tuckerman, until September. It is doubtful if all the choir, if any, return to their old position.

Miss Carrie Harsher, contralto of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, of Albany, N. Y., was in town last week.

Miss Belle G. Leavitt of Salem, sang soprano at the Baptist Church last Sabbath. She will sing regularly for the present.

A testimonial parlor concert was given last week in Lynn complimentary to Miss May C. Barrelle, who has sung so acceptably several times at So Peabody, the past season. It was given at the residence of Representative Beckford, of Lynn, and besides music from the beneficiary herself, there were songs by Isaac Littlefield, of East Stoughton, who is pleasantly remembered by friends in this town, and readings by H. Grahame Wheeler, of this town.

It is told as a fact, that a teacher in our high school cannot keep track of the scholars unless they are there to answer to their name. In some cases the boys when going to and from the recitation room would skip out and go in swimming, and when the class returned they were not missed. On one occasion a member of the school committee is said to have noticed a couple of the boys on the prohibited side of the railroad track, and when they saw him they got out of the way. The member of the school board then went to the school house and reported seeing the boys, giving the names of two whom he thought he saw, but they were in their seats. As he was positive he saw two of the high school boys there, the teacher said that if he could tell him their names he would see if they were present.

The church going people were a little surprised last Sunday in passing the residence of a business man, not far from the square, to see a game of lawn tennis in full operation. The gentlemen had become so warmed up over the game, that they were in their shirt sleeves. Playing base ball in the fields by boys on Sunday is a crime, to play lawn tennis on your private grounds, is what?

There is a mother living on Wallis street who has devised a means of relieving herself of any anxiety concerning her offspring while it is out to play, and saves herself lots of extra steps. The child is turned out to play with the other children and on its back is pinned a paper stating to whom it belongs and its parents' residence. The mother can keep about her work knowing that whoever finds the child will leave their work to bring it to her. This should be generally adopted.

There is a painter (?) in town who has botched a number of signs and who thinks he knows the whole business. Recently he painted a grocery wagon for a friend of mine, and after it had been in use a few days, the paint begun to blister, and my friend has not since dared to wash his wagon for fear he would take all the paint off.

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils for throat, and frequently by both channel.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individualat different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of a notable size, on which traces of blood mayat times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant snuffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertions. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical or mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, toss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lighthill to decide on the first examination as to the cureability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of Poet's Corner.

Swamp-Flags.

BY M. T. DOWNEY.

When I was a child and wandered
Down in the dusky dells,
Dreaming my dreams of summer
Wrapped in its hazy spells;
Feeling the sunlight golden
Floating my curls above,
Warm as the hand of a lover
Pressing the hand of love.

Living a life of buoyance,
Breathing the balmy air,
Knowing the bliss of being,
Naught of its pain and care.
One of those haunts of magic—
Beautiful dusky dells—
Full of a thousand secrets—
Summer and sunlit spells.

There grew the flags untended,
Maidenly, mystic, green,
Wearing a Sunday silence,
Suiting the silent scene;
Dipping their long, green lances
Into the waters still;
Sighing and whispering secrets
Under the sheltering hill.

Now in the house, and the homelike
Hush of a silent room,
Sunlight through curtains of crimson
Slanting athwart the gloom:
I see on the wall before me
A painting of swamp-flags green,
Bending in grace and beauty
'Twixt me and a moon-lit scene.

I sit and embroider a panel,
And my fingers tangle the thread,
As I sigh for the sunlit summers,
The peace and the child-heart fled.
I see 'neath my fingers growing
The green and the dusk brown stems.
And my heart with my fingers is working
And making its memory gems.

Some hand, when I am forgotten,
Will surely unravel the task,
Nor of the toiler trouble,
Nor of the fancies ask.
So, in our lives unheeding
We look on the poor, cold part,
Nor dream of the poem and passion
Hid in the toilers' heart.

Good-Night, My Love!

FANNY FORRESTER.

The gloaming gray is creeping
Around our trysting-place,
And in soft shadow steeping
Thy lovely drooping face.
Good-night my love! good night, good-night!
Still, still we linger heart to heart,
And though we say good-night, good-night!
Ah, me! we cannot part!

The crystal dew is blinking
Upon the drowsy rose.
Whose languid head is sinking
In indolent repose.
Good-night my own! good-night, good-night!
See, now I twine her in thy hair,
Ah, happy flower! good-night, good-night!
No thorn shall wound thee there.

The night winds sing thy praises
Through every rustling tree—
Through all the whispering daisies
They waft my sighs to thee.
Good-night, sweetheart! good-night, good-night!
Trip o'er their heads with fairy feet—
One smile, one kiss, good-night, good-night!
My daisy, pure and sweet!

All stately, pale and tender
The moon sails through the gloom,
Go, love, and may her splendor
Thy homeward path illume.
Good-night, dear love! good-night, good-night!
There, now, thy trembling hands are free—
My star, my Queen, good-night, good-night!
Be sure I'll dream of thee.

"'He cometh not!' she said."

He never came whose step and loving call
I waited long to hear,
But thou hast come, last Messenger of all,
A friend well nigh as dear!

Peace if not joy—yet peace itself were gain,
That must supremely bless
The soul sore travailed that in vain, in vain
Hungered for happiness!

Draw closer, oh, thou voiceless Guest and pale,
Whose drooping torch burns low;
Thy face is hid, but through the somber veil
Thine eyes' dark light I know!

Nay, closer still!—I yearn on brow and heart
Thy cool, strong hand to feel;
Fevered with wounds, and throbbing with a smart
Thy touch alone can heal.

I go with joy! Lead me to him at last,—
How dim the path and lone—
Him, whose far footsteps, echoing through the past,
Have never met mine own.

Selected Story.

Graham G. Stacey, D. D. S.

Middletown hadn't been so excited since old Captain Pidgers hanged himself with the strings of his wife's best bonnet. The cause of this unwonted quickening of pulse and limbering of tongue in the lethargic little village, bidden to everlasting repose by the railroads that tapped it for a neighboring city, was—a man! "Only this and nothing more;" but he was young and good looking, and had evidently come to stay, as a modest sign, whereon was painted 'Dr. Graham G. Stacey, Dentist,' bore witness.

If further proof of his staying qualities had been asked it could have been found in a kindly statement (price ten cents per line) conspicuously printed in the Middletown Plaindealer, to the effect that Dr. Graham G. Stacey, fresh from Philadelphia with his well-earned laurels, had furnished elegant dental parlors at No. 20 Main street, over the barber shop, and would be pleased to receive the patronage of the public. The editor protessed to know and esteem Dr. Stacey, taking seven lines of nonpareil for the statement, and adding a postscript relative to new and improved instruments, teeth extracted without pain, fillings warranted for three years, etc., 't. f.'

Middletown read, marked, learned and inwardly digested the Plaindealer's enconiums, sent out scouts to find where the stranger was boarding, and finally gave him the freedom of the city by inviting him, through the agency of perpetually standing committees, to take a sitting in each of the churches, to contribute to foreign and domestic missions, to attend a bazaar, and to have a membership in the circulating libraries. How devoutly the young ladies wished there was a vacancy in the choir, and how scornfully they commented on the basses and tenors of the well-meaning old deacons and elders who innocently praised the Lord from the organ loft.

No one knew until later that the shapely throat of the blue-eyed stranger was not built for singing. His talent for vocalization resembled that of the first Napoleon for dancing; he could not sing himself, but he set his associates to warbling—generally in his praise. Small cause was there for wonder that he should be the theme of eulogistic discourse, even in the communities where all the eligible young men had not taken Horace Greeley's advice and gone to the land of the setting sun and rising value of stocks and real estate. He was tall, slender and elegant; his raiment did not bag at the knees or 'bunch up' at the back; his teeth were white enough and even enough to serve as an advertisement of his profession, his dark brown hair gracefully outlined the fairest and smoothest of brows; his moustache was a love, his mouth was a darling; to be sure his nose—a fine straight one, by the way—was rather longer than Apollo Belvidere's but then, as Tom, Miss Aurelia Wintergreen's impertinent young brother, said, You can't have too much of a good thing.

Physical charms and grace are well enough in their way, says some sensible and didactic old bore, but after all they are but the guards and trappings of a real man, and, they conceal rather than reveal him to us.

True enough, old gentleman! No one could have told by looking at our gentle, genial dentist of sweet smiles and deferential address that he was equal to the task of acting the role of guide, philosopher and friend, with a suspicion of sentiment thrown in, to twenty maidens, more or less mature, without danger of pistols for two or a breach of promise suit.

'Tis opportunity that makes the man.' If he had lived in the far West, where belles are scarce and beaux are a drug on the market, he might have gone to his grave without a suspicion of his talent for finesse.

For instance: If he had any rivals save three or four downy-lipped boys and an ancient widower who couldn't see what the blazes made all the women run after that tooth carpenter, could he have taken Miss Millicent Winter to a festival one evening, and applied balm to the feelings of her six intimate friends by taking them in couples to the ice cream parlor three successive evenings thereafter? Could he have extracted all Mrs. Higgins' upper teeth, when her intention had been to part with only the two front ones, and then lured her back to divest in the wisdom teeth the manufacturer cuts for two dollars a tooth, and a plate given as a premium, if he had not been the sole masculine auditor when the twins, Dora Isabella and Maud Ethelinda Higgins, executed their soul-stirring duets on piano and guitar?

Would twenty beautiful and accomplished young ladies of the best families at Middletown have submitted to the trying ordeal of having their lovely countenances almost turned wrong side out while Dr. Stacey dug and scraped and scratched at their pearly molars with his liliputian pickaxes and files, pounded red hot gold over shrinking nerves, or examined the pimples on their tongues with his little magnifying glasses, the while he half choked them with napkins, whitened his sleeve with the French chalk intended as an ornament to their cheek bones, rubbed their aristocratic noses the wrong way, mussed their front hair and knocked their back ditto into a chaos of tangles and hairpins?

There is no occasion for echo to answer these questions: they answer themselves.

It's perfectly ridiculous, soliloquized the Widow Blondine, the way those silly chits of girls take on over that man! Anybody can see that they are wasting their time. When he marries, if I am not much mistaken, it will be a woman with some knowledge of the world, some experience in affairs of the heart, not a crude school girl like that pert Sallie Satterlee, nor yet an unsophisticated village spinster like that absurd old Aurelia Wintergreen. They do say he knocked her wig off, and she sent him a note the next day explaining that fever turned her hair gray when she was a mere babe. Silly old thing! I don't wonder some men despise our sex. That reminds me, I must put Mollie on her guard. To be sure she isn't forward, but the spirit of rivalry is very strong in the female breast. Seeing the rest do it she might fling herself at his head before she realized what she was doing. Ahem! I almost wish I hadn't asked her to make this visit, but as long as brother did not ask me anything for my teeth I thought I must make some kind of a return, and Mollie says she is so sick of Fogg Centre. Ha! Ha! I'm one person not likely to be tempted to have our village Adonis patch up my masticators!

Miss Mollie Mifflin came, she saw she did not conquer, nor yet give herself in conquest, as far as the naked eye could discern. Indeed, after the first start of surprise when the lion was led up and introduced, the little golden-haired, hazel-eyed beauty ignored his very existence when possible, and at other times acknowledged it only by a scornful curl of her rosy lips, or a disdainful pucker of her dear little nose.

So very pointed were Miss Mollie's indications of disapproval that suave Mrs. Blondine remonstrated.

Why can't you be polite to Dr. Stacey, Mollie? she asked in an aggrieved tone, after observing her neice's hateur and the satisfaction it afforded the marriageable majority of Middletown. He is a perfect gentleman.

Oh? ejaculated Mollie, in a tone that gave that monosyllable a volume of meaning.

Yes, he is, persisted her aunt, with an air of one who would not forget what was due to a guest, even if the guest's ears did need boxing, yes, he is, she repeated. He washes his hands in Florida water every day, does not smoke, chew, nor drink, nor tumble the pillow shams, nor tie knots in the curtains—

What of that? What business has he meddling with your pillow shams and curtains?

Dear me, Mollie, I had no idea you were so provoking. Mrs. Pinchem told me how neat he is—he boards with her, you silly child. She says he is the best pay and the least trouble of any boarder she ever had.

Glad to hear it, auntie; but as I do not contemplate opening a rival boarding-house, allow me to say that I care positively nothing for Dr. Stacey's habits or his window curtains.

But you'll drive him away from the house. He does look at you so queerly when you cut up so. Such a general favorite won't stand any incivility, I can tell you.

So much the better.

But I don't want him driven away. I—he—that is—oh! can't you see?

Miss Mollie's face reddened, probably with amusement, for after a second she laughed, rather sharply, it must be confessed—and saying, Yes, I think I see, left the room with undignified haste.

I am homesick. Please invent some good excuse for my breaking my visit in two in the middle, and give auntie orders to send me home, immediately. If you don't I'll tell her plainly that I'm tired of Middletown's two big boys and one old widower. Write to us both immediately, that's a darling.

Dr. Mifflin had not been the parent of a young lady with hazel eyes and a turn-up nose for eighteen years without learning something. He wrote at once.

When next Mrs. Blondine moved in society, she was alone.

Dear Mollie could not come this evening, she explained sweetly, in a tone elevated to reach Dr. Stacey's ear. Her papa sent positive commands for her to return home immediately. Her train leaves at six in the morning, so she was obliged to do her packing this afternoon.

No doubt it was a feeling of relief that made Dr. Stacey gnaw his moustache so fiercely, and embrace the first opportunity to slip out under the unseeing eyes of the night. Possibly any Middletown apartment was too narrow bounds for his relief. Middletown would have risen as one woman and declared it so, had it been questioned.

It looked reasonable, but how can you explain the following conversation, which took place in Mrs. Blondine's garden?

Is that you, Miss Mifflin?

Oh—ah! I beg your pardon, Dr. Stacey. In the starlight I did not at first recognize you. My aunt is not at home.

Hang your—I saw her at Miss Wintergreen's a few moments ago. I have come here to have it out with you. I will not stand any more of your enigmatical behavior.

I do not understand you, began Miss Mifflin, drawing herself up as haughtily as her limited number of inches would allow.

Yes, you do, Mollie, and you shall not withhold an explanation any longer. The merest stranger might claim as much as that.

Mollie tried to pass him, but he held out a detaining hand.

Answer me! He commanded.

You know, murmured Mollie, finally, making a wild dash for liberty through the migonette bed.

I beg your pardon, I do not. By the memory of those happy days at Cresson, tell me why you sent back my ring and ran away without letting me know where to find you. No, I am not going to let you escape until you explain why you treat me so cruelly.

Then Mollie's temper gave way under the strain.

How dare you ask? she exclaimed indignantly: I lived in a fool's paradise last summer, until that morning I saw you—

Saw me what, he asked with ungrammatical eagerness.

Saw you in the little reception room with a lady's head on your shoulder. I was too happy to sleep, and had risen and gone early to the spring. As I came back I saw you.

Dr. Stacy looked puzzled for a moment, then laughed uproariously.

Is that all? he gasped. Ha! ha! ho! ho! To think what a year I've had for that! You didn't see the lady's face?

No! snapped Mollie, fairly incandescent with rage.

It was the hotel proprietor's wife. I remember how early she called me up to have a tooth extracted. This is the way you are held during that interesting ceremony.

Two months later, Middletown announced that its confidence had been abused. Dr. Stacey took unto himself a wife, and gave no one an opportunity to snub her as she deserved. Rightly judging that Middletownites had had all the denistry they would need in years, he moved to Fogg Center and became the junior in the partnership of Mifflin & Stacey.

I made the match, announced the widow Blondine, forgetting all about Annaias and Sapphria.

I knew Molly would just suit you, Dr. Stacey.

To the latter part of her remark the doctor cordially assented.

Lee and His Generals.

Amid the ruins of their capital, with bare, bowed heads, in utter silence and bitter tears, Lee and his Generals separated and went their several ways to homes destroyed, families broken up and scattered, and often into exile and oblivion.

The final parting was in front of Lee's mansion in Richmond, two days after Appomattox. Lee's house is an ordinary square brick, standing alone on Franklin street, one square from the capitol. All the other houses on the square are connected. Upon the afternoon of the second day after the surrender the people in that vicinity were surprised to see come riding up the street from the south a company of Confederate horsemen. They were unarmed. Their gray uniforms were worn, soiled, and often tattered, their trappings old and patched. They wore slouched hats, and here and there was a feather remaining of the once smart and jaunty drooping plume of the Confederate cavalryman. They were bronzed and browned and bearded. They sat erect, and came on with the splendid horsemanship for which they were noted. Upon the collars of some the gray jackets could still be seen the faded and tarnished gilt stars, the emblems of the wearer's rank.

In front of them rode Lee. His two hands held the loosely swinging reins and rested upon the pommel. His head was bent and his eyes were looking straight ahead from under his downcast brow, but they seemed to see nothing. As the troops cantered up to his old home his horse stopped at the gate, and he aroused himself suddenly, as from a dream, and cast his eyes upon the familiar windows and then around over the group of gallant soldiers who had followed his fortunes for four bloody years and gone down in the defeat under his banner. The end of it all had come at last. He threw himself from his horse, and all his companions followed his action. They stood hat in hand, with arm through the bridle rein, while Lee went from man to man, grasping each hand, looking intently into each face as though he would impress it upon his memory forever. Then he turned and walked through the gate and up the steps to his door. As a servant opened the door he paused with his left foot upon the veranda, his right upon the last step and looked back, for the last time. Not a word had been spoken, not a good-by uttered. There was no sound heard but that of sobs as these unkempt and grizzled heroes of a hundred battles leaned against the shoulders of their horses and wept. Lee gave one look and broke down at last. His hands were over his eyes, his frame shook with sobs, as he turned quickly and disappeared into his lonely house. With the closing of the door behind him ended forever the wild dream of the Southern Confederacy.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

A GOOD BREAKFAST. — Mrs. E. W. Carpenter, Overlee, Baltimore, county, Maryland, writes: I was greatly benefited by the use of Red Star Cough Cure, when suffering from a severe cold. My cook was seriously ill from a deep-seated cough. She had consulted her doctor without relief. By my advice she used Cough Cure in connection with an external application of St. Jacobs Oil to her side. In one night the change wrought was most gratifying and astonishing. In the morning she was like a new person.

Parisian swells now carry natty little canes with genuine coral heads. They come high, but the French dandies must have them, and no doubt they soon will be carried by local Beau Brummels. At a distance these canes look like an early spring radish mounted on a reed.—The Argonaut.

M. L. Blair, Alderman 5th ward, Scranton, Pa., stated Nov. 9, '83: He had used Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil for sprains, burns, cuts, bruises and rheumatism. Cured every time.

Reciprocity is very well in its way, but when it comes to your wife wanting you to reciprocate a pair of fifty-cent braces with a fifty-dollar ring, you've got to brace up and figure out just where the reciprocity hits you on a sore spot.

Platform Echoes.

JOHN B. GOUGH'S NEW BOOK.

"Platform Echoes, or Leaves from My Note-book of Forty Years," is the title of John B. Gough's latest, and, we may add, his best book. It is a volume of sterling merit, by a very famous man whose early history and wonderful career are so well known. It is profusely illustrated with 227 of the finest engravings and steel plates we have ever seen, and we can truthfully say that so far as real merit and telling illustrations go, this elegant volume outranks all other subscription books that have come to our notice.

Ever since the beginning of his public career Mr. Gough has kept a private notebook in which he has recorded the most interesting facts and incidents coming under his observation. This note book now covers a period of forty-three years. It is an inexhaustible storehouse of personal experiences, tales of tender pathos, stories of the keenest and drollest humor, and anecdotes and incidents without number; and in extent and variety of intensely interesting matter it is probably not approached by any other private record in existence.

Many of the most eminent men and women of our time have repeatedly urged Mr. Gough to publish in book form the most effective stories and facts recorded in this note book, together with some of his most brilliant efforts on the platform. He has also received hundreds of letters from grateful persons who have been benefited—and in some instances saved—by the power and influence of his words, asking for a volume of this kind. These expressions of heartfelt gratitude convinced Mr. Gough that it was his duty to yield to the wishes of the public, and this volume is the result. He has spent the greater part of three years in its preparation.

Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, whose fame and scholarship are world-wide, wrote the introduction to the book. It is as good a piece of literary work as Dr. Abbott ever did. In it he gives a most interesting, full and complete history of Mr. Gough's life and work.

The book itself is bran new from beginning to end, no part of it ever having been published before. Mr. Gough says it contains "Living Truths for Head and Heart." So it does; and it takes firm hold on both. He illustrates great truths by strikingly pertinent facts and stories. In every chapter he sparkles and glows, rises and falls, now lifting the reader in breathless elation in some sublime picture now depressing him to tears with a graphic tale of domestic ruin, desolation, remorse, or death,—then like a flash of lightning he comes to his relief with a story so irresistibly funny that the reader is instantly convulsed with laughter. And so he weaves in anecdote after anecdote, incident after incident, story after story, with marvelous rapidity and powerful effect. He plays upon the reader's feelings as with an enchanter's wand, at one time filling his heart with gladness, at another blinding his eyes with tears. It can truthfully be said that for thrilling interest, touching pathos, and irresistible humor, no book has ever equaled this one.

There is no condition in life this grand book will not improve, no individual who cannot find sound advice and kindly admonition in its pages. The best thing about it is that it will be read by both old and young. It will excite to laughter or to tears in every chapter, while bringing home to every heart the most wholesome lessons in a manner that will leave an abiding impression. It is pre-eminently a book for the home circle, and its influence will be felt long after John B. Gough has passed away.

Its illustrations are the best we have ever seen. There are 227 of them. Many of them happily illustrate the humorous side of life, and are "too funny for anything," while others illustrate life's pathos. There are two fine steel plates of Mr. Gough. One is full-length, and shows him as he was in 1855, when the marks of his terrible dissipation were upon him. His pale, thin face, hollow cheeks, wild, sunken eyes, tell their own story. The other portrait is from a photograph just taken, and shows Mr. Gough as he is to-day. The contrast between the two is great.

We advise our readers to buy Platform Echoes at the first opportunity. They can, in our opinion, much better afford to dispense with a dozen other books than not possess this. Once begun it will not willingly be laid aside till the last page is finished. Published by A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn., and sold only by subscription. Agents wanted. Address the publishers.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for August is a bright and sparkling Summer number. The leading article is "American Missionaries in Mexico." If the writer, Emily Pierce is sure of her facts, it is not a creditable record. Another of the series of Christ's Parables, and two more of the Sacred Musicians, appear in this number. "The First Missions in California," with its illustrations, is a very interesting article; and "From Canterbury to Dover," by G. A. Davis, a delightful bit of description. Dr. Talmage's sermon is on "Left-handed Men." The eccentric Georgia evangelist, the Rev. Sam. Jones, is given a portrait and biographical sketch. The two serial stories—"Love's Harvest," by B. L. Farjeon, and "What She Made of Her Life," by Lydia Hoyt Farmer, are continued. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place New York City, at 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year.

INGERSOLL'S BOYHOOD.—Col. Robert G. Ingersoll is often said to have formed in boyhood a prejudice against orthodoxy, because his father, a Congregational clergyman, reared him so rigorously as to deprive him of every rational pleasure. The exact contrary is true. The paternal Ingersoll, of whom Robert was extremely fond, was remarkably liberal, and on account of his liberality was always in trouble with the members of his church and other evangelical persons, who made him very unhappy. This seemed so narrow and unjust to Robert that he came to hate the name Calvinism and all its teachings. His hatred has increased with his years, and is rigorously expressed in his anti-religious lectures. A native of this State—he was born in Amsterdam—his family led a wandering life until they settled, when he was ten years old, in Southern Illinois. For years he called Peoria his home, but of late he has spent most of his time in Washington, where his legal practice is reported to be worth $40,000 per annum. Albeit an ardent politician, he has never held any public office except that of Attorney-General of Illinois. After having been beaten in 1860 as a Democratic candidate for Congress from that State, he resolved never again to seek the suffrages of the people, and he has kept his resolution. He refused in 1877 the mission to Berlin, which had been tendered him by the State Department. He is doubtless aware that his aggressive attitude toward orthodoxy would be successfully used against him at the polls. At his house in Peoria, one day, a visitor seeing a fine edition of Voltaire's works in his library asked how much it cost him. His answer was, "The Governorship of Illinois." Personally Ingersoll is exceedingly popular. He is a delightful talker and companion, being full of interesting reminiscences and humorous anecdotes. He numbers among his friends many persons whose theological opinions are diametrically opposed to his own.—Boston Post.

Hotel Nahant, this popular and well-kept summer resort, under the old proprietorship of Samuel Soule & Son, is now in full tide of successful operation. Last evening the first of a series of band concerts was given to a vast throng of delighted listeners. The horse-cars, on their new time-table, were taxed to their utmost, and many hundreds not fortunate in getting on board wended their way to the musical feast by the old method. The Soules' facilities for comfort and refreshment are at their best, and as Hotel Nahant is so easily accessible we bespeak for its experienced and polite proprietors their full share of the public patronage,—and have no doubt they will receive it.—Traveller.

BEAUTIFUL SEA VOYAGES.—The Norfolk line of steamers are very popular to those who like a short sea voyage, plenty to eat, the best of comfortable surroundings and a variety of scenery. The managers of the company have just issued a pretty tinted circular giving full information when the three elegant steamers, the Chatham, D. H. Miller and Berkshire sail, and the cost of going to Norfolk, Baltimore, Washington and other places on the route. C. P. Gaithe, 290 Washington street, Boston, is the agent of this line.

Owing either to the great value and interest of the book itself, or the manner in which the publishers deal with their agents, the new book, "WORLD'S WONDERS," published by the Historical Publishing Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., is meeting with extraordinary favor from the public. This work was issued in January last, and the publishers now announce the 16th large edition, which is certainly a most surprising result in the sale of a book. A full description of the book, and the publishers' special manner of dealing with agents and persons desiring employment, will be found in our advertising columns.

The New York Nation printed in its issue of June 25 a retrospect of the twenty years of its existence which were completed with that number. The Nation was founded in July, 1865, in recognition of the new order of things which was sure to follow the end of the war and the abolition of slavery. It at once espoused the cause of pure, unpartisan administration of the National Government; and the present condition of civil-service reform is owing to it more than to any other instrumentality. Its foreign correspondence is unrivalled. Its book reviews (by the leading scholars of the country) possess the highest authority. Each number contains a careful news summary, and the bound volumes are prized as the best obtainable chronicle of current history. 24 pp., quarto. 10 cents a number; $3 a year. 210 Broadway, New York.

Babyhood for July urges upon parents the importance of "labelling" little children by always marking their full names and addresses in indelible ink on some easily-accessible part of their clothing, such as the inside of the collar-band. There can be no doubt that such a custom would be fruitful of many good results, and go far toward alleviating the anxiety of parents in cases of their little ones straying away from home, or becoming lost in a crowd or disabled by an accident. This number of Babyhood abounds in useful suggestions to mothers, and, in the variety of topics treated by its contributors and correspondents, proves its ability to fulfil its avowed intention to become a channel for the best thoughts of all who study the highest interests of child-life. Among the leading articles are "The Baby that Must Go to the Country," by Marion Harland, and "The Quantity of Food Required in Infancy," by Prof. J. Lewis Smith, physician to the New York Foundling Asylum. 15 cents a number, $1.50 a year. 18 Spruce Street, New York.

Science will publish on July 10 a sanitary number giving special attention to water and the soil in their relations to the contagious diseases. One of the longer articles gives the history of the water-supply and the sewer-system of Chicago in relation to the health of the city. Its reviews of valuable books will contain new light upon the longevity of the different classes of society, the comparative exposure of the poor and the rich to infectious diseases, and the relation of consumption to age.

Moses King, while a student at Harvard College, earned his entire college expenses of about a thousand dollars a year by making books, and since graduation, a few years ago, he has published many successful books; among them "Students' Songs," which has had the most remarkable sale ever known for a book of its class. Over 40,000 copies of this "Students' Songs" have been made, and the demand is almost the same as before. The songs have been heard and heartily enjoyed by thousands of people at glee club concerts, college festivities, college societies and at home and social gatherings. The book itself is also a cause of its success. It is handsomely printed, and contains sixty of these songs, with their music, nearly all of which are copyrighted, and to be found in no other collection. Already several so-called collections of students' or college songs are in the market, but the only one that has been noteworthily successful is edited and compiled by Wm. H. Hills, a young Harvard graduate, and published by Moses King, the publisher, at Hanover square, in Cambridge, Mass.

"Appleton's National Railway and Steam Navigation Guide" has been purchased from Messrs. D. Appleton & Co. by the Knickerbocker Guide Company, and consolidated with the Knickerbocker Ready-Reference Guide. The consolidated publication, the first number of which is the issue for July, 1885, is called the Travellers' Ready-Reference Guide. It will be slightly larger than Appleton's Guide, but will be sold for the same price (25 cents), and is the only national railway guide which is sold at that price. It contains many features which will commend it to the traveling public. The July number contains a Tourists' Guide in addition to the usual matter. The book will be issued by the Knickerbocker Guide Co., from the office of the National Railway Publication Co., at 46 Bond Street, New York, the latter company being the well known publishers of the Official Railway Guide, the standard work. From this fact will be seen that the publishers possess unrivaled facilities for obtaining early and accurate information respecting all transportation matters.

The August Harper's will have full-page pictures both by E. A. Abbey and Alfred Parsons; the former a frontispiece illustrating "A Love Song," by Austin Dobson, the latter one of the charming illustrations of Wordsworth's sonnets, "Bees that Soar."

Ballou's Magazine for August is a capital number. First there is an illustrated article on some parts of Germany and a very good illustrated account of Chili and its glaciers. Then comes "Lewey and I; or, Sailor Boys' Wanderings," by Wm H. Thomes, author of many books that are justly celebrated, among them his two latest, "The Belle of Australia," and "On Land and Sea; or, California in 1843, '44, and '45." In "Lewey and I" the scene is in California during the Mexican war. It is a most fascinating story, and is historically correct. Ballou's is published by Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley St., Boston, at $1.50 per year, or only 15 cents single copies. Ask your newsdealer to order it for you.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,

Editors and Publishers.

THE DASTARDLY outrage committed in Marblehead, on an inoffensive stranger, deserves the indignation of all lovers of law and order. This gentleman, an employe of B. F. Doak & Co., of Lynn, rode to Marblehead for a pleasure trip. Coming out of a store on a principal street he was set upon by some roughs, and severely kicked, beaten and otherwise maltreated, without any warning.

No wonder the Marblehead Messenger wants more law in that town. It is certain that the people therre, who believe in law and order, would like to see what law there is enforced. It is for their interest, for the honor of the old town, that such a scene as occurred there shall not be repeated, and that the perpetrators shall be brought to speedy punishment. It is a disgrace to Marblehead that such an affair could happen.

The reason given for the attack is that the man was thought to be a spotter. Suppose he was. Is that any reason why an assault should be committed? But he was not. And is it to be said that no person who is a stranger can enter the town of Marblehead without being taken for a spotter? It certainly must be said unless the assault be speedily avenged.

The Law and Order League have nothing to do with the case. Mr. Sawyer had nothing to do with that body. He was in Marblehead minding his own business. He had a right to be there. The roughs of that town had no right to take the law into their own hands in any event. And least of all they had no right to make an attack on an innocent man.

Mr. Sawyer was a member of Bay State Lodge I. O. O. F. of Lynn. And in this connection we are glad to learn that the members of that order in Marblehead are interesting themselves in the case, not only for the good of their own town but to give all the sympathy and aid in their power to a brother in need. The Odd Fellows everywhere will sympathize with Mr. Sawyer, and they, as well as all good citizens, will rejoice in seeing speedy punishment meted out to the guilty parties, to the full extent of the law.

GOV. ROBINSON has appointed the new police commissioners, of Boston, Albert T. Whiting, chairman, William M. Osborne and William H. Lee. They are all men with experience in the city government, and the criticism made in some quarters that they are without experience in the police department, and are not the parties most prominently urged for the place, should not be allowed. It is said of President Cleveland, that a large portion of his success as Governor of New York was due to the fact that his appointments were made from men who were not active politicians. Their capacity for the work given them was developed after their appointment. No one questions the ability of the appointees. They have a large work to do. They need the support of all citizens of the State without regard to party, who desire a better police system in our large cities—a better enforcement of existing law. For that reason we can afford to wait. The very lack of experience may be the best qualification in the end, to their success.

The property of the publisher of the Congregationalist has been attached for a libel action for $100,000 by Edward P. Tenney of Manchester.—Exchange.

The idea of a religious newspaper being sued for libel, and the leading New England puritan sheet, too. It is really too bad.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Have music in the family circle. You will not find the husband, father or brother seeking amusement abroad evenings, when his home is blessed with vocal and instrumental music. Music fills the soul with that pure holy feeling, which will fertilize the soul of friendship, and home, above all other places, should be attractive and happy. Maine Farmer.

Boston popular concerts at Music Hall every evening. Admission only 25 cents. These are promenade concerts and a continuation of Mr. Neuendorff's venture previously at the same place. Music Hall has been transformed into a bower of beauty. A fountain plays in the centre, while flowers and plants are in profusion. Tables are provided at certain portions of the hall where light refreshments are served.

A most enjoyable musicale was given at the East Church, Salem, Thursday, at 4 P. M. Chas. A. Clark and Miss Carrie Martin officiated at the organ and Mrs. Bigelow sang.

Manager Foster of the reorganized Ideal opera company has secured for next season Mlle. Zelie de Lussan, soprano, who is expected to make a great hit. She is said to resemble Mme. Patti, and to have a fine soprano voice and real dramatic ability. Mlle. de Lussan supplies the place of Geraldine Ulmer. Whitney's place will be supplied by W. H. Clark, the basso, and Mathilde Phillips' by Agnes Huntington. The other principal members of the company will remain. The organization will, as previously announced, have a repertoire similar to that of the Carl Rosa company in England.

The music to the hymn composed by Rev. Chas. C. Sewall of Medfield, over 83 years old, for the installation of Rev. Henry F. Jenks at Canton last week, was written by Gen. Henry K. Oliver of Salem, now over 84 years old, calling the tune "Jenks."

F. C. Record has gone to Old Orchard Beach for the summer to take charge of the orchestra of the Old Orchard House, where he was last year.

Christine Nilsson says she never grows tired of hearing herself sing. Chrissie is not by a long sight the only singer big or little who is clean gone on her or himself. But few are so honest as to thus own up.

SOUTH PEABODY.

The funeral of Mr. Henry Southwick took place from his late residence on Lynn St., last Saturday afternoon, his shopmates attending in a body. The remains were placed in Monumental Cemetery.

The L. & B. R. R. Co., carried 1933 through passengers last Sunday, the largest day's work this season thus far.

The attention of the school committee should be called to the bad condition of the fence surrounding the school house in this part of the town.

Mr. Joseph Wiggin has resigned his position as conductor on the new Danvers railroad, on account of being so far from his work.

The Sabbath School will hold their annual picnic at Echo Grove, Lynn, this year.

The annual gathering of the John Needham family will occur on or about the 15th of August, at Brown's grove.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Wiggin have been stopping at Magnolia the past week.

Mrs. Joel Needam is quite sick at her residence on County St.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Needham celebrated the seventh anniversary of their marriage Tuesday night by giving a party to a few invited friends.

H. Law's shop crew of Lynnfield had a fish fry at horse pasture point, South Peabody, last Monday, and a very good time was had by all present. —Wakefield Bulletin. How long has horse pasture point been in So. Peabody?

The annual Lynnfield Hotel Sunday School picnic will occur next Tuesday at the Maolis Gardens, Nahant. Hathaway is to carry the party there in barges.

NORTH PEABODY.

We regret to learn of the continued illness of Mr. Joseph Bolster.

Mr. Daniel Cummings, of Prospect street, is building an addition to his barn.

Miss Francis Pray, of Baltimore, is stopping with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. William Price of Andover street.

Mr. A. P. Blake is improving the looks of his residence by a coat of paint.

Complaint is being made that the horse cars do not run early enough to accomodate the workmen working in Peabody or Salem. The first car does not leave here till 7.20. The directors will probably remedy this when their attention is called to it.

The hoodlum element prevails here to more or less extent, during which a good deal of damage is done to shade trees and fences, carrying off gates, etc., is done. We are very much in need of police protection.

A trip on the Empire State in these days is one of the most enjoyable of any thing in this vicinity. Many of our readers know this well from experience, yet every year this popular boat brings old friends as well as new ones to the pleasures of an all day trip on our coast. Those who are fond of the water and are not afraid of a slight attack of sea-sickness will prefer the trip to Provincetown, the South Shore, or one of their ocean trips. Those who prefer smooth water will find no difficulty in enjoying the trip to the North Shore or the Mouth of the Merrimack. This latter trip is a comparatively new one for this boat; it is really the North Shore trip with an addition, giving a view of all the coast to Newburyport. From this point can be seen, on a clear day, as was the case on a recent trip it was our pleasure to make, both the Isle of Shoals and Mt. Agamenticus, in Maine, situated thirty-five miles away. The scenery is beautiful all along, and the capacity of the boat gives all an opportunity to see it. Besides the outside enjoyment there is an abundance of music on board. The band connected with the steamer, under the direction of C. H. Tompkins, plays popular airs as the steamer leaves the wharf, and after she is well on her course gives an orchestral concert in the saloon. At three o'clock in the afternoon another concert is given and between these the company on board either sing the familiar "Gospel Hymns" or if there are musical people on board they usually entertain the company. On our trip Miss Hilda Thomas from New York, sang several pieces to the accompaniment of the Orchestra, being rewarded with rounds of applause. Tompkins' band is better than ever this year, reminding us of our Salem Cadet Band. Several xylophone solos were given by Mr. Bower in splendid style, and there were also solos on the cornet, piccolo, and trombone. Master Cushing, a young lad of about twelve years, performs solos on the cornet in addition to the band, and he is really an accomplished player for one so young. His instruction must have been of the best, in addition to his remarkable musical ability. A sensible innovation has been made in the transformation of the ladies' saloon into a cafe where ice cream, tea and coffee, and a light lunch is served at all hours of the boat's trip. Of course this does not interfere with the dining saloon where a good dinner is to be obtained at a reasonable price—a rarity on board most of the boats in this vicinity. Good order is always observable on the Empire State, the entire boat is neat and clean, the officers and employes are courteous and civil. Capt. Phillips is well known to all who are accustomed to take many trips on this boat. The company would not feel at home without his presence. He is everywhere on the boat, pointing out places of interest and with a pleasant word for everyone on board. This year the management have reduced the price of tickets to suit the times. Gents' tickets are 75 cents, ladies', 50 cents. We can honestly recommend this trip to our readers. The steamer leaves Battery Wharf every day at 10 A. M., to which cars run directly either from the Revere Beach or Eastern depot. To-day the steamer takes the North Shore trip, to-morrow to the Isle of Shoals; Friday to Provincetown; Saturday a matinee in the bay at 2.30, price 35 cents; and Sunday to Provincetown.

Edw. C. Almy & Co., 167 Essex street, Salem, are closing out all their Spring and Summer Goods to clear their counters for the mammoth stock of Fall Clothing. At this season of the year many find it necessary to supplement their wardrobes. They have a large assortment of the most desirable styles. They also offer a big variety of boys' and children's suits at prices guaranteed the lowest. One of the most attractive features of this store is the gentlemanly clerks, among them Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Tierney. The latter having recently closed his legislative duties has resumed his old position where he will be pleased to meet his friends.

The Boston Herald thinks Gov. Robinson the only man in Massachusetts who can save the state to the Republican party this fall. Unless we are much mistaken the Herald thought John D. Long was the only man who could save it a few years ago. He was not. A party is greater than any one man. Does the Herald know that Dr. Loring is now unoccupied? — Salem Telegram.

If the republican party can only be saved by the nomination of Dr. Loring. God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts? If the republican party wants defeat at the outset we know of no surer way to bring it about.

SPARKS.

The Board of Engineers held their regular monthly meeting last Wednesday evening and elected John H. Tibbetts Chief Engineer, vice Wm. J. Roome. Engineers Johnson, Southwick and Reed voted for John H. Tibbetts; Engineer Buxton voted for Engineer Johnson and Engineer Tibbetts cast his vote for Engineer Reed. The vote stood three for Tibbetts, one each for Johnson and Reed. H. A. Southwick was appointed second assistant Engineer and placed in charge of the Central Station. Jerry O'Rourke and Edward W. Pierce were approbated to Hose 2 in place of Edward McGurn and Chas. W. Forness resigned. Wm. H. Connors was approbated to H. & L. 1 in place of H. A. Southwick. Chief Tibbetts was placed on the committee on houses, apparatus and hose in place of Wm. J. Roome. Engineer Southwick was put on the committee on hydrants and reservoirs in place of Tibbetts. A number of bills were approved.

Abel Proctor H. & L. have recently had the names of the members placed under their respective cabinets in the large picture of the company of last year. The work was done with a pen in old English letters. In the center above and below the picture of the truck, is the name and year in ornamental scroll work. It is neatly done and reflects credit on the penman, Mr. J. W. Washington, of Salem.

General Sutton Steamer No. 1, have recently had their by-laws newly printed in bronze with a black background.

Henry P. Southwick, who died last Thursday, was formerly an active fireman in this department, having served on the old Eagle hand engine, and later in Steamer No. 1.

Chief Engineer West of the Peabody fire department was instantly killed last evening while crossing the tracks of the Eastern railroad at Peabody.—Boston Traveller, July 9th.

The above item appeared first in the Record of Wednesday and was copied into several others of the Boston papers. There is not nor never was a Chief Engineer West in the Peabody fire department. The dispatch was intended to announce the accident to Ex Chief Chase of Salem, which took place in Salem.

Chief Tibbetts regaled the members of the department with lemonade and cigars at the Central Station last Friday evening. It was his treat to the boys on his election to the position of Chief.

Orders have been issued by the Engineers that no person not a member of the fire department shall be allowed to ride on the apparatus at any time either in going to or in returning from an alarm of fire. There is hardly room on any piece of apparatus for the companies, to say nothing of having them filled up with those who have no business there. The orders will be enforced. Z.

The third annual meeting of the descendants of Rebecca Nourse will take place at Danvers, Mass., Thursday, July 30, 1885. The meeting will be held at 12 M., at the First church, in Danvers Centre, formerly the Salem Village church, of which the Rev. C. B. Rice is now the pastor. Addresses will be made by Rev. Fielder Israel, pastor of the First church, of Salem, of which church Rebecca Nourse was a member at the time of her arrest; and by Rev. C. B. Rice pastor of the Danvers Centre church. It is proposed to take a collection at the close of the exercises in the church, for the purpose of fencing and endowment of the lot. The lunch will be served in the vestry of the church, immediately after the collection. There will be a committee to take charge of wraps and to receive the baskets, which should be plainly marked. After the lunch a procession will be formed for the cemetery, where the monument will be dedicated. At our previous gatherings we have, through the courtesy of the late Orin Putnam, enjoyed the use of the grounds about the old homestead, and received permission to go over the house. This year the courtesy is extended by his daughter, who resides at the place at the present time. Horse cars leave the corner of Washington and Essex streets, Salem, for Danvers Centre, at fifteen minutes before each hour of the day, and pass the church.

The July number of the Young Ladies' Journal comes to us from the International News Company of New York. It is overflowing with good things for the ladies. There are pages of fashion plates, fancy work, and designs for embroidery, etc., besides a large amount of reading matter, consisting of interesting sketches, continued stories, poetry and family reading matter. If our lady readers have never seen this work they should ask Mrs. Gilson, our local dealer, to show them a copy. They can get more ideas about the style dress they want from it than from their dressmaker. Try it and see how you like it.

STREET
GOSSIP
GLEANED
BY NOTES
Mulcahy

I was taken completely by surprise last Saturday, to see two representatives of the Salem Telegram riding leisurely along Essex Street, behind a horse that couldn't cast a shadow. They were Foster and Tibbetts. How a newspaper man could get even so poor a team puzzled me, as I examined the soles of my shoes and began to feel envious. I stopped right in the middle of the road and looked after them, and as they drove up to the sidewalk, I saw that they were not used to such luxury, for Foster in getting out squeezed himself between the wheels, and rushed off dusting his clothes, while Tibbetts jumped out over the wheel, and the other animal leaned up against a post and went to sleep. I knew then they had been stealing a ride.

Looking over the audience at the lecture of Bob Ingersoll last Sunday evening, I was not surprised that most of the audience from Peabody, who were present, agreed with the speaker. How could they help it they knew nothing about "Orthodoxy" and naturally swallowed all that Bob bit off for them to chew. Every one looked at Bill Smith, while the speaker told the yarn about the razor, and I think myself he had him in mind. But say what you will, the peculiar feature of his anti-religion, his matchless eloquence and irresistible humor and audacity, win applause from his audience, who enjoy it even if few of them are convinced.

It is quite important that an engineer of the fire department should always "keep his head." I heard that the chief who recently resigned, stopped a steamer on the way to a fire a short time ago, until he could get on and ride. Time is a great thing when there is a fire, and should a steamer stop to pick up the firemen on the way, I am afraid our department would not sustain the reputation it now has.

The "goody-goody" Congregationalist frequently takes delight in "poking fun" at the local news columns of country weeklies, seated on its towering height of exalted sanctimoniousness. Here is a sample from a recent issue:

> A needed crusade in journalism is against the recording of such petty personalities as the following, all clipped from local exchanges, many of which give from one to two columns weekly to this kind of mental pabulum: "Our friend Jones is building a hennery." "Mrs. B. has just completed a crazy-quilt of 676 pieces." "The minister went to Boston last Wednesday." "Mrs. E. P. B. has been absent in New Hampshire a week, visiting friends." "Some fine puppies were recently shipped from this port." "A sudden death in this office, last week, caused much sorrow among the compositors. Thomas, a favorite cat, shuffled of his mortal coil." "Little Sadie Smith" gave a lawn party on her sixth birthday and wore a lovely dress of pink silk and white muslin."

Not content with shaping the destinies of eternity and telling people all about it for $2.50 a year, this religious censor evidently aspires to govern the earth; but it has "caught a Tartar" this time, and a good-sized one, too, in the person of Editor Parkhurst of the bright Clinton Courant, who "goes for" the "goody-goody" in the following relentless manner:

> In the columns adjoining that from which the above very silly paragraph is scissored, we observed the following trivial items and "petty personalities:" A Dorchester Sunday school has bought new chairs—a Lynn church recently had a supper—a Haverhill clergyman recently had the chills and fever—the Derry, N. H., association brought their wives to a late meeting—a Michigan minister is in danger of a "total collapse of nervous force"—half a dozen pastors have had a "reception," etc.; in short, if a minister goes to Europe—has the present of a new coat, or a railroad pass — receives a call —reaches home safely after a journey into a neighboring state—breaks his leg—suffers a donation party—is titled with a "D. D."—has a new parsonage built or an old vestry frescoed—the Congregationalist publishes the same, even if it is obliged to "borrow" the item from some newsy "local exchange;" and it not infrequently mentions—modestly of course—the arrival or departure, good or ill fortune of its editors and office attaches; if it is proper for religious papers to give its readers "petty personalities," why may not a secular paper do the same? Proper facts are very rarely improper newspaper items.
> It may be the exceedingly sapient and self-righteous Congregationalist has never heard the pathetic story of the man who managed to get a very respectable living by minding his own business, or of the ridiculousness of "Satan rebuking sin."—Milford Journal.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The Boston Journal contains a despatch from Plainfield, N. J., dated July 8th, of "a suit for $10,000 damages for breach of promise against Dorsey W. Hyde of that town, by Miss Carrie Worthern of Salisbury, Mass. Miss Worthern claims that Mr. Hyde proposed marriage and was accepted, and that he made a second proposal at Elizabeth, N. J., in July 1880, which was also accepted. Her claim is supported by an engagement ring, and numerous letters. Mr. Hyde married Miss Catherine Clark of Northwood, N. J., in Dec. He acknowledged his engagement, but claims that she released him in 1882. Miss Worthen formerly lived here and is well known to many of our readers.

The Sunday travel on our numerous horse railroads is reaching fearful proportions and last Sunday was the biggest day yet. The Lynn & Boston road carried 1933 through passengers on the Peabody branch and as many more local fares were taken. The Naumkeag road transported over 11,000 people on all its branches. One conductor to the Willows took 578 fares on his car and another nearly 700. The new branch of the Salem & Danvers road to this town, received a liberal share of the patronage, and, while there were numerous delays on the latter they were excusable and things will be running smoothly in a short time and the beautiful ride will be enjoyed by many.

The farmers have been making hay while the sun shone for the past two weeks, and a large portion of the early crop has been secured. The old fields are not yielding in proportion to their promise, the grass having grown tall but slender and proving fine and light when dried. Clover on newly seeded ground is better and a fair crop has been secured. The season has been favorable for the grass roots and the award has been improved. The largest yield we have heard from was a lot cut on a river lot cut by Mr. N. M. Quint, which averaged about three tons to an acre.

About fifteen members of Naumkeag Encampment from this town attended the meeting of the encampment last Thursday evening, the occasion being the taking in of about forty members of Ozias Encampment of Marblehead, which recently disbanded, and the installation of the officers elect. After the work of the evening the Camp adjourned to the Willows and partook of one of Wentworth's fish suppers at the Pavilion. Among the officers are Chas. D. Bliss, C. P.; John O. Buxton, S. W.; John K. Saunders, I. S.; Chas. S. Kimball, 3d W.; Henry P. Dorsett, 1st. G. of T. of this town.

A well known gentleman of this town recently wrote to Gen. Manager Furber of the B. & M. Railroad to know why the citizens of this town could not have the benefit of the thousand mile tickets in use on the other division of the road. While he was not told that such an arrangement would be made, he was assured that the interests of Peabody would be looked after. Probably should a petition, signed by those who travel, be addressed to the General Manager it would lead him to take action quicker, and the result desired be secured.

The picnic of the Essex County Universalist Sunday School Union was held at Centennial Grove on Wednesday. There was a large company present, filling fifteen cars, besides what came in barges and other conveyances. It was estimated that two thousand persons were present. Dr. Bolles, who was to deliver the address, was obliged to be absent to attend a funeral. The amusements mentioned in the programme came off, and the music by the Salem Cadet Band was excellent, but owing to the extreme heat most of the company kept shady.

A man named Jaques was put on the witness stand at the police court this morning in the Draper liquor case and in giving his testimony he told what had passed between him and the defendant. "What kind of an arrangement was that," quickly asked Mr. Crowley, counsel for the goverment. "Nothin a toll," said the witness; "yers can't catch me on arrangement. I ain't afraid of your bluff. I'm here as a dacent witness, and I won't say more onless I have me pay." A hearty laugh in which the court joined followed this outburst.

A lady was standing on the track when the 11.07 train from Lowell on the Boston & Maine track came in yesterday morning and did not notice it. Those who saw her warned her of the danger and as she left the track the engine just grazed her skirts.

As the strawberry season is about over we are getting rid of the hollering of the hawkers who have made life a burden for the last two months.

There was an interesting liquor case in the police court this morning. Edward Draper was charged with keeping liquor with intent to sell, and he was defended by Eugene McCarthy Esq. Draper told a straightforward story about keeping the liquor, and said he had been in the habit of keeping it for his own use. Several witnesses testified to his giving them a glass of beer at different times. On the other hand the officers said they found the beer in a barn, and that Mrs. Draper tipped over a pailful when the officers came. Judge Merrill reserved his decision one week.

There was a lively time on the three o'clock car from Peabody on the Naumkeag road Monday afternoon. The boy who has charge of the tow horse was not paying attention and the horse turned off after reaching the top of the hill as usual, but as he was not unhitched, the car ran into him, knocking him down, and but for the prompt action of the driver of the car, he would have been injured. The old horse laid and kicked while the ladies screamed and jumped off. No serious damage was done.

Last Saturday morning W. B. Richardson's horse ran away on Franklin street, having become frightened by leather being thrown on the polls at Wiley & Poor's. Mr. Richardson while attempting to jump out was thrown on his hands and knees, and had the skin taken off the latter. The reins became caught in the wheel, and turned the horse completely round, and Geo. M. Wilson secured him on Foster street. It was a new horse.

Holten Lodge I. O. O. F., have received from the Grand Secretary of the Sov. Grand Lodge a fine picture of the Ridgely monument, which was erected in Baltimore by volunteer subscriptions of five cents each from Odd Fellows all over the country. The monument will be dedicated in September. Mr. Ridgely was Grand Secretary of the Sov. Grand Lodge from 1840 to 1881. The picture will be framed and hung in the Lodge room.

The following is the assessed valuation of our churches, and in the opinion of some, should be taxed:—St. John's Catholic Church, $60,000; Congregationalist, $35,000; Unitarian, $22,000; Universalist, $15,000; Methodist $15,000; Baptist $10,000; Andover Street Chapel, $1800; South Peabody Church, $6000; St Paul's, $4000. The rate will be $15.60 on $1000. Last year it was $16.40. What is the matter with that West Peabody?

Rev Mr. Shipman, of the Baptist church, completed his first quarter as pastor last Sunday, and, in referring to it, said that he had called upon most of the members of his church and society. He had visited about 150 persons and some 90 residences. The remainder of this month will be spent in visiting the aged and invalids. And after his vacation, which occurs next month, he will resume his pastoral duties.

Last Saturday afternoon a horse and carriage containing two ladies of Lynn, were coming down Kosciusko street, when the horse became frightened at a bell, and ran away, striking a tree on Lowell street, and throwing the ladies out, cleared himself from the carriage, was captured on Main street and taken to the stable of F. T. Arnold. One of the ladies received several bruises on her arm but neither were seriously injured.

About a thousand attended the Union picnic of the Methodist Sunday schools at Garrison Hill, Dover, N. H.. last Thursday. The party found it a pretty hard hill to climb, but a delightful view was obtained from the observatory of the surrounding country. About five hours were spent on the grounds, and everything went off pleasantly. The excursion was planned and carried out by Jas. F. Almy of Salem.

Telephone connections in this town are now made by numbers instead of names. In view of this fact the Naumkeag Clothing Co. have presented us with a neat card, on which can be placed a list of the subscribers most in use, by the recipients of the cards. The feature is an excellent one and will be found very useful in making connections by the new arrangements.

Berry parties to Ipswich will be interested in the following from the Chronicle of that town. "Berries were never so plenty at Brackett's grove and berry pasture as this season. A road has been constructed from the main road to the bushes and grove, and facilities are offered picnic parties for berry picking and enjoyment.

Daniel J. Sweeney lost his little daughter last Monday from cholera infantum. It was nine months old, and an unusually bright child. He has the sympathy of his friends.

Dennis Cronin, formerly of this town, died at Manchester last Sunday of consumption.

The case of Sweeney and Crandall, charged with assaulting Christopher Kiley, on the Fourth came up in Salem Monday, and was continued till Friday.

Rise and Fall of the Roller Rinkist.

BY BILL NYE.

I have tried once more to ride a pair of roller skates. That is the reason several people got down on me. That is also why I now state in a public manner to a lost and undone race, that unless the roller rink is at once abolished, the whole civilized world will be plunged into arnica.

I had tried it once before, but had not carried my experiments to a successful termination. I made a trial trip around the rink last August, but was ruled out by the judges for incompetency, and advised to skate among people who were hostile to the United States, while the proprietors repaired the rink.

On the 9th of September, I nestled in the bosom of a cyclone to excess, and it has required the bulk of the succeeding months for nature to glue the bones of my leg together in proper shape. That is the reason I have not given the attention to roller skating that I should.

A few weeks ago, I read what Mr. Talmage said about this great national vice. It was his opinion that if we skated in a proper spirit, we could leave the rink each evening with our immortal souls in good shape.

Somehow it got out that on Thursday evening I would undertake the feat of skating three rounds in three hours with no protection to my scruples, for one-half the gate money, Talmage rules. So there was quite a large audience present with opera-glasses. Some had umbrellas, especially on the front rows. These were worn spread, in order to ward off fragments of the rink which might become disengaged and set in motion by atmospheric disturbances.

In obedience to a wild Wagnerian snort from the orchestra, I came forth into the arena with my skates in my hand. I feel perfectly at home before an audience when I have my skates in my hand. It is a morbid desire to wear the skates on my feet that has always been my bete noir. Will the office boy please give me a brass check for that word so that I can get it when I go away.

My first thought after getting myself secured to the skates, was this: Am I in the proper frame of mind? Am I doing this in the right spirit? Am I about to skate in such a way as to lift the fog of unbelief which now envelopes a sinful world, or shall I deepen the opaque night in which my race is wrapped.

Just then, that end of the rink erupted in a manner so forthwith and so tout ensemble that I had to push it back in place with my person. I never saw anything done with less delay or less languor.

The audience went wild with enthusiasm, and I responded to the encore by writing my name in the air with my skates.

This closed the first seance, and my trainer took me in the dressing room to attend a consultation of physicians. After the rink carpenter had jacked up the floor a little, I went out again. I had no fears about my ability to perform the mechanical part assigned me, but I was still worried over the question of whether it would or would not be of lasting benefit to mankind.

Those who have closely scrutinized my frame in repose, have admitted that I was fearfully and wonderfully made. Students of the human frame say that they never saw such a wealth of limberness and looseness lavished upon one person. They maintain that nature bestowed upon me the hinges and joints intended for a whole family, and therefore when I skate, the air seems to be perfectly lurid with limbs. I presume that this is true, though I have so little leisure while skating in which to observe the method itself, the plot or animus of the thing, as it were, that my opinion would be of little value to the scientist.

I am led to believe that the roller skate is certainly a great civilizer and a wonderful leveler of mankind. If we so state that when the summons comes to seek our ward within the general hospital, where each shall heal his busted cuticle within the walls where rinkits squirm, we go not like the social wreck, morally paralyzed, but like a hired man taking his medicine, and so forth—we may skate with perfect impunity, or any one else to whom we may be properly introduced by our cook.

Skating on the roller skate is like riding on a railway train. If the management is good and we behave ourselves, we feel safe. Rinking in and of itself is not dangerous from a moral point of view—with good associates and a solid road-bed we are safe. So it is also in travelling. If our rink tickets are good in a well conducted rink, and our railway tickets read over the Great Rock Island route, we have done wisely and the rest remains with us. We may wreck ourselves in front of the engine or injure ourselves morally and physically at the rink if we wish to. There are many, however, who are not agitated over the rink question. To such it might be well to say that the Rock Island road is still carrying people with comfort, elegance, economy and despatch.

The Seventh Ohio.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer's representative brought away these stories from a meeting of the 7th Ohio the other evening:

I said that the regiment was keen. They demonstrated this at Weston. When the officers heard that $600,000 was locked up in the bank at Weston, and that the rebels were making forced marches to recover it, they hurried on and captured the money. The town was almost deserted when the 7th boys arrived. They captured among other things a newspaper office, and for two weeks they issued a paper from the office. The town had never had anything except a sleepy old weekly paper, but the men got out the raciest daily ever seen in those parts. The man that came in to whip the editor usually retired on a stretcher. There was no coming in to stop the paper. The boys didn't care whether the paper was taken or not. It was the most independent journal ever published. The oldest inhabitant had never seen such a spicy paper. Upon another occasion the men, who were nearly starving, ran across a grist mill. They wanted some flour, but they had no money except some duplicate paper currency captured in a bindery, words to the effect that it was duplicate currency, and hence valueless, being printed across the bottom. The miller objected to taking it but when they had trimmed off the objectionable words he failed to recognize the money, and received it readily, selling them flour at $10 a sack. Having supplied their own demands, the men carried the flour to the nearest grocery and sold it for $2.50 per sack in gold. One soldier had but one $10 duplicate bill, but it was observed that at night he had $50 in gold. He sold the grocer his first sack of flour, and it was thrown on a large heap of sacks of flour that he was busy buying. This soldier went around at the rear of the grocer's pile, secured another sack, and after a proper interval came in bearing the sack, which he sold to the grocer. For more than an hour he sold the merchant his own flour, and the confederate grocer never discovered the fraud. It was one of the brilliant civic exploits of the regiment.

TIRED AND LANGUID WOMEN.—How many women there are of whom these words are true: "They feel languid and tired, hardly able to bear their weight on their feet, the bloom all gone from their cheeks, irritable and cross without meaning to be, nerves all upset, worried with the children, fretted over little things, a burden to themselves, and yet with no acute disease." What a pity it is. But a few bottles of Parker's Tonic will drive all this away, and relieve the troubles peculiar to their sex.

"I do so like the general," said a voice behind me at the opera. "He's a dear man, isn't he?" "Yes; you know I am sort of related to him." "Indeed; I never knew that. How?" "He came very near being my father. He was the first man my mother was engaged to."

"That tired feeling" from which you suffer so much, particularly in the morning, is entirely thrown off by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"The old poets used to spend a whole week over a single line." Labor-saving machinery has greatly simplified things, since nowadays a washerwoman will spend only a few hours over a single line—and she earns quite as much money as the old poets, too.—Norristown Herald.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sensitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

KEEP IT PURE.

THE LIFE IS THE BLOOD—PREVENT DISEASE—SURGERY THE LAST RESORT—A TELLING LETTER.

Here is a fact for you to think over, viz.: Medical science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety they seem to have, proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints—some of them appearing almost directly opposite in their natures. When a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. But, while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.

It is conceded that DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "FAVORITE REMEDY" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from Cancer.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., March 22, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home, I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system, too, required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly commended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result surprised me, it was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since the "FAVORITE REMEDY," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that.

Yours, etc.,
MATTHEW FARRELL.
24 Adams Street.

In all cases when a consultation is deemed desirable.

Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. But, if you have not done so, adopt "FAVORITE REMEDY" as a household friend.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

FAVORITE REMEDY

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5. by all druggists.

Hotel Cranks.

Where is Library Hall?

On Penn. avenue, between Sixth and Seventh streets.

Well, I know as much about it as I did before. How do you get there?

The little man who asked the questions turned away with a blank look, as if he had been struck with a brick. The hotel clerk who had reeled off the bit of verbal geography quoted, was by this time telling another man what time the next train went to Steubenville, and another at what time the next mail from Philadelphia would be in.

There, said an old traveling man, that is a fair sample of what a hotel clerk goes through about fourteen hours every day. No matter how busy he is or how tired, he has got to stop and answer each man's questions, and then if he doesn't furnish a map with his answers they kick at the uppishness of hotel clerks. Now that little man had his hand on the city directory when he asked for Library Hall. That man who wanted to go to Steubenville had looked the matter up in the time table, for I saw him, and knew as much about it as the clerk himself. That other man don't get a letter a month, and I know it, for I meet him often, and he stops here once a month, and knows all about the mails, or ought to, for he always asks.

The life of a hotel clerk isn't the picnic you might take it to be. He is the target for the kick of every dyspeptic guest and for the imprudence of every upstart who happens to have his expenses paid by some one and gets into a good hotel once in a while. I know, because I have been there. The people whose board don't cost them fifty cents a day at home are the ones who are not suited with anything the waiter can bring them. They make unpleasant remarks at the table, much to the annoyance of the other guests and when they come down have to make themselves obnoxious to the clerk by going over their grievances to him. The man who never traveled much is a good deal of a bore to a hotel clerk anyway If he isn't kicking he grows confidential and tries to while away the clerk's busy hours by family reminiscences and personal affairs. After one of these fellows has stopped in the house two or three days the clerk could write a book about him. This sort of a man, however, is always good natured and seldom finds fault, and when he does it is in a sort of half apologetic way, as if he really didn't want to make any trouble and was sorry he spoke of it.

Take it for all in all, I think I'd rather drive a street car than clerk in a hotel again.

About the best trade a hotel can get is the commercial trade, he continued. Drummers are the daisy travelers. They know what they want, and are willing to pay for it without kicking. A jolly good-natured drummer 'll jump down from a 'bus, toss his gripsack to a porter, and walk up and register with a How are you, old fel, to the clerk.

Anybody in No. 43?

Yes, Jones came in last night.

How's No. 62?

Empty.

Throw my traps in it, will you? and of he goes and has half a day's business done before the dyspeptic passenger has got through directing the porter to keep his overshoes right side up while taking them up to the room. There are some snides among the drummers. They are the fellows who have their mail directed to the best hotel in the city, and come round there to pick their teeth while boarding at a cheaper house. These men are despised by the profession in general, though.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

WHAT WILL SURELY DO IT.—One's hair begins to fall out from many causes. The important question is: What is sure to make it grow in again? According to the testimony of thousands, Parker's Hair Balsam will do it. It quickly covers bald spots, restores the original color when the hair is gray or faded, eradicates dandruff, and causes the scalp to feel cool and well. It is not a dye, not greasy, highly perfumed, safe. Never disappoints those who require a nice, reliable dressing.

OLD POINT COMFORT.

Glad to leave Washington and its many attractions, we board one of the river steamers, and after assuring ourselves that there were plenty of life preservers we engage a passage to Old Point Comfort. The boat is one of those old fashioned affairs with two wheels and sets way out of the water, and at a distance looks as if it was modeled after a childs Noah's Ark. The sail down the river was very pleasant and the twilight lasted till after nine o'clock. At a late hour we turn in but not to sleep, as the old boat made so much noise and went along with such a jerking motion sleep was impossible, and it seemed at times, as if she would go to pieces, but toward morning tired nature resumed its sway and a few cat naps were obtained. About seven o'clock next morning, however, we came up smiling at the steamboat wharf at Old Point, a few yards from the frowning battlements of Fortress Monroe. This attractive place is on a narrow spot of land almost surrounded by water and extends from the eastern shore of Virginia into the broad expanse of water formed by the confluence of the James River and Chesapeake Bay.

HYGEIA HOTEL.

A few rods from the landing is the famous Hygeia Hotel, the beautiful home of many a Northern family in Winter, and Southern family in Summer. The climate is delightful the year round. The hotel is situated on the water's edge and a wide sandy beach lies in front of it. It is about twenty miles west of Capes Charles and Henry that great gateway to the Atlantic Ocean and looks from three sides on to broad sheets of salt water. To the northeast is Chesapeake Bay, to the south is Hampton Roads, the former at this point is about twenty miles wide, and the latter about five miles. On the southwest is the Elizabeth river and to the westward is the mouth of the James. The Hotel has a frontage of nine hundred feet, its broad verandas at high tide almost overhanging the surf. It is four stories high, furnishing ample accommodations for twelve hundred guests and is fitted with every modern convenience, while its system of drainage is the most perfect of any hotel or public building in this country, or so it has been pronounced by skilled engineers. The rooms are elegantly furnished. There are drawing rooms and parlors on every floor. There are fifteen thousand feet of verandas fronting on the water and in the winter season enclosed with glass, enabling the most delicate invalid to enjoy the sunshine and the broad water expanse without any risk of exposure even in the severest of weather. There are elegant private smoking and banquet rooms for those who desire without extra expense. Dressing rooms for sea bathers are provided in the house and surf-bathing is immediately in front and a few feet from the hotel. From the large and spacious dining room a fine view of the beach may be obtained, and at this season it is lined with red parasols, beneath which are the fair female visitors at the hotel, and gay white-capped nurses with long haired children building miniature forts in the sand, while life is made more enjoyable for the ladies by the presence of blue uniformed and brass-buttoned officers who are stationed at the fort, and whose principal business seems to be to bestow their smiles on the prettiest girls. As one walks about and sees the peaceful and leisure look upon all, he can scarcely realize there is a busy and active world outside, and after spending a few hours at the Hygeia among the seven hundred people sitting around, we felt as if we, too, belonged to this, rather than the work-a-day world outside. Perhaps we reached that state of the dying French lady, who, when the priest directed her attention to the joys of Paradise said "Paris was good enough for her." To give a slight idea of how elaborately this hotel is furnished we will speak of the new banquet hall just remodeled and opened for the first time this season. It is 28x63 with a ceiling of white pine with cypress paneling and elaborate cherry mouldings, embossed velvet papering, beveled-edged mirrors, which are set in the walls. In the center of the room are pretty Persian portieres of rich Arabesque patterns, to be used when a smaller room is needed. The windows are of Queen Anne Cathedral glass. There are little tete-a-tete tables of wild-cherry, delicately carved, and the china is of a pretty design, with heavy silver service made in artistic forms. Mr. Harrison Phoebus, the proprietor, is very popular with his guests and the residents in the vicinity, and is a very genial gentleman.

FORTRESS MONROE.

Immediately in the rear of the Hygeia Hotel, is Fortress Monroe, which covers about eighty acres. It is no doubt familiar to many of our readers, some of whom have seen service there. The form of the fort is that of an irregular hexagon, two sides looking towards the water and four upon the land. The walls are thirty-five feet high and built of granite, while about the whole is a ditch or canal a hundred feet wide or more, filled with water to the depth of ten or twelve feet. On the land side, the ramparts are solid and on the side next the water are two tiers of guns. Crossing the bridge that spans the canal, we pass the sentinel and are inside the fortification, which is free for the inspection of all. To one who was never inside a fortification of this kind a surprise is in store for him, he finds the interior beautifully laid out, with broad walks shaded with live oaks and other trees. Before him is a large parade ground where he can spend an hour under the trees, watching a parade or guard mounting, and listening to the music of the full military band stationed here. The fort is used at present as a school for post graduate officers from West Point, and only about 250 enlisted men are here. Looking around one can hardly realize he is inside a fort, there are pretty cottages, a chapel, the store of the Post Trader facing the parade grounds, and numerous other buildings, including the one in which Jefferson Davis was confined, which is used at present as a guard house. Leaving the fort, we took the road leading to Hampton, passing stacks of old cannon balls, condemned ordnances, or parts of the same, and after crossing the bridge, that spans Mill Creek, past the sentinel who does duty there night and day, we leave the government property behind and riding over a hard, dusty road made of oyster shells, we reach the NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

The home is finely situated and the weary brow of the volunteer veteran is fanned by the cool and pleasant breezes from off the water, and like the soldiers' home in Washington, everything is provided for their comfort and the last hours of their life are made as happy as possible and they are surrounded by as many home influences as possible, to guard against the temptations outside. There are temptations outside and a stranger cannot help noticing it. On every side in the vicinity of the home are rum-shops, some of them situated in isolated places, and at first one wonders where they get their patronage, but when it is known that there are a thousand feeble minded ex-soldiers in the home, nearly every one of whom receives a pension, it is not strange that these places flourish and offer any inducement for the men to gratify their appetites. To prevent intoxication and the use of hard liquors, beer is sold to a limited amount inside the grounds of the home. The grounds are extensive and well kept and some of the buildings are quite imposing. The men were out spoken in praise of their present Governor, Captain P. T. Woodfin, of Marblehead, who received his appointment through the influence of Gen. B. F. Butler, and we believe it was at his hands the General's name was presented to the Massachusetts convention that nominated him the first time he ran for Governor. A short distance from the home, is the National Cemetery, in which repose the remains of nearly six thousand soldiers, and as at Arlington, their graves are marked by rows of low headstones extending in every direction. In the centre is a solid granite monument sixty-five feet high. The grounds around the monument are enclosed with an iron fence, the posts being three inch rifled cannon, and the pickets, musket barrels with bayonets fixed. In one corner are the graves of about three hundred Confederate soldiers, who died in hospitals near by, when prisoners of war. There side by side the blue and the gray, and the "unknown" from many battlefields, have found a peaceful resting place.

HAMPTON NORMAL AND AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTE.

A short distance from the Soldiers' Home is the Hampton schools for the education of the negro and indians. The institution was started in 1867 by the American Missionary Association, the object being to furnish teachers for the negro race. Since 1878, Indian students have been admitted and the expense of their education paid by the government. There are a number of substantial buildings inside the grounds which comprise nearly 200 acres. The system of training is manual as well as mental labor. In connection with the schools, a farm and several workshops are in operation, where the students learn a trade or how to manage agricultural pursuits. There is a saw mill and harness, shoe, tin, paint, carpenter, blacksmith and machine shops, besides a printing office and bindery and several other trades for the boys, while for the girls is a sewing and tailoring department, knitting and mending department, cooking and household work, etc. We were kindly furnished with a guide and permitted to visit the numerous class rooms and listened to the recitations by the pupils, and the methods employed by the teachers. It was a novel sight to see a lady teacher hardly out of her teens, patiently and carefully explaining the simple lesson to great dusky indian boys and grown up women, and then too, it was interesting to watch the pupil as he or she tried to grasp the idea, which it seemed so hard for them to retain, and even when they failed, their big, coarse features would broaden into a smile when the young lady told them they were guessing and they must try again. Had we the space we could write a whole letter on this institution, where there are between five and six hundred students and where an excellent work is being done. In the more advanced classes the Indians and colored pupils are taught together, and the more recent Indian students taught in separate classes. The latter take more readily to the mechanical pursuits than to books and some of the nicest buildings on the grounds were built by them. Among the teachers, whose branch is Natural Philosophy, is Miss S. E. Wentworth of Danvers, of whom her superiors spoke with unstinted praise.

THE BUTLER SCHOOL HOUSE.

When Gen. Butler was in command of affairs at this point, his famous "contraband" order brought many thousands of colored people including children in flock within the Union line. There was nothing for them to do and uncle Ben caused to be erected a large, one story frame building in the form of a Greek cross, and New England teachers were brought to teach them. He compelled the young negroes to attend school, and the government continued the school during the war. It is now used as a district school and maintained by the county six months in the year, and another three months the Normal school, supplies the teachers. In one end there is a family living who have charge of it. The walls of the school rooms are covered with pictures cut from illustrated papers and cheap lithographs of ancient design. The original benches still remain, many of them cut and disfigured by Butler's young "contrabands" in its early history.

THE TOWN OF HAMPTON.

This quaint old town has many places of interest, but is comparatively new, having been destroyed by General Magruder during 1861 "in order that it could not be used as a place of shelter for Union troops." Every building but two were burned and even the venerable St. John's Episcopal Church was burned and nothing saved but the walls made from brick brought from England in 1835, it was rebuilt after the war and is open for inspection to strangers. There are many things to remind a visitor of the days "befo' de wa" in the shape of the tumble down shanties of negroes, where the lazy looking occupant is sitting in the shade smoking his pipe, or poking about the streets with a saw over his shoulder looking for a job. Stopping to look after a venerable old fellow with a "yeller dorg," who was walking along the street, a neighbor remarked "that is a Virginia creeper" and it struck as a very appropriate name. Half clothed children run about the street and the long nosed pig, roots along side the road in the dirt with the other "pickaninnies." The family carriage here takes the cake, and would create a sensation in the North. The animal most frequently seen is generally a steer or cow, and are never yoked together, but driven singly. The harness consists of numerous ropes, straps, withs and sticks and present a comical appearance. And then the vehicle is a marvel, composed of a rough box nailed upon an axletree attached to wheels, one perhaps belonging to an ox team and the other an express wagon, while the shafts are usually as large as a tongue to an ox cart. In this the darky goes to market and takes his family on pleasure trips to neighboring points. A darky with this turnout is an aristocrat among his neighbors.

RETURNING HOME.

Leaving Old Point Comfort with a feeling of regret, we take the afternoon boat for Norfolk to connect with the Steamer Berkshire, of the popular Boston, Norfolk and Baltimore line. The Berkshire is a companion boat to the Alleghany and has all the luxurious appointments of the latter, while her officers are courteous and attentive. Capt. Kent, the officer in command, while more reserved than Capt. Taylor, is an agreeable travelling companion and was willing to impart any information to the passengers. We want to say here that the boats of this company furnish the pleasantest and easiest way of reaching Baltimore, Washington or any of the cities of the South, as connections can be made at Norfolk or Baltimore with all the trunk lines. Every comfort of land is assured a passenger. It is not possible in our limited space to describe the appointments of the boat. The staterooms are models of comfort and neatness and of liberal proportions, while the boat is furnished with an utter disregard to cost. Leaving Norfolk in a rain storm at a quarter of nine on Friday evening, some three hours late on account of taking on board a load of "garden sass," consisting of thousands of boxes of beans, peas, cucumbers, etc., our last look at the dirty city was the most enjoyable. We glide along with a pleasant motion, and the stormy weather drives us inside and enables us to make the acquaintance of our fellow passengers, some eighteen in number. Inside the bay the water was smooth and calm, but the practiced eye of the officers detected a heavy wind outside, and acting on their advice, we turned in early. We have a faint recollection of waking up and feeling the boat go up, up, up, and then down, down, down; again we heard hurrying footsteps along the deck but felt perfectly safe from the fury of the waves outside and resumed our sleep. Next morning found only six of our party at breakfast and a very heavy sea accounted for their absence, while the stewardess went from stateroom to stateroom with the ship's contribution box. We went on deck and soon we began to feel that motion which some one has described as "like riding a gigantic camel that has the heart disease and you do not miss a single throb." And shortly we found ourselves recklessly casting a miscellaneous breakfast into the seething billows. But in a few hours all were laughing over it, and with a few exceptions, before night all were on deck and for the remainder of the trip they more than made up for the meals they lost, by an increased appetite. The weather was clear and delightful and most of the time was spent on deck Saturday and Sunday watching the sea—an everchanging kaleidoscope. After land was sighted, there was much of interest to take our attention. We had a clergyman with us, the Rev. J. W. Buckley of Georgetown College. At the request of the passengers he preached a very appropriate sermon which was enjoyed by his small audience. After rounding Cape Cod, things along shore took on a familiar look and at a quarter before nine on Sunday evening just forty-eight hours from the time we left Norfolk, we ran along side the company's wharf in Boston, glad to be back again on the soil of our native state, and with a good-by to pleasant companions, we are off for the train to take us home.

The recent landslide from Owl's Head at Jefferson, N. H., which is said to surpass in magnitude the famous Willey slide, will serve to attract an unusually large number of visitors to the White Mountain region this summer. Those who contemplate this trip will do well to obtain the summer excursion book of the Boston & Lowell railroad, "Summer Saunterings," which is sent to all applicants upon receipt of six cents in stamps. Inquiries for the book should be addressed to Lucius Tuttle, general passenger agent of the Boston & Lowell. Those of our readers who go to Jefferson will also find the Waumbek Hotel the best place to stop. Circulars and information can be obtained at this office.

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils for throat, and frequently by both channel.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individual at different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of a notable size, on which traces of blood may at times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant snuffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertions. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical or mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, loss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lighthill to decide on the first examination as to the curability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of Four boys named W. Keefe, Ed. Keefe, Tim Sweeney and Joseph Colman were arrested for stealing cigars from S. B. Winn's man, while returning from the St. John's Sunday School picnic last Thursday, and fined $3 each.

A team attached to a truck driven by Wm. H. Fleming, of Salem, ran away on Aborn street last Saturday. Fleming was thrown out and was slightly bruised. The horse continued toward Salem, and a child named McCarthy just escaped being knocked by the horse jumping to one side.

One of our gardeners who has a fine field of potatoes has taken great care of them and not allowed any bugs to live on the vines. A few nights ago some one dumped about two quarts of potato bugs onto his premises, but fortunately they were discovered before they had reached the vines. Such an act is contemptible.

We were surprised in reading in the Ipswich Chronicle's account of the recent visit of several members of Naumkeag Encampment to that town, that our respected and usually quiet citizen, James Buxton, "favored the company with a dance which created much merriment."

A large number attended the picnic of the St. John's Sunday school at Andover last Thursday. The day was spent with games, boating, and other things that go to make a picnic enjoyable. They returned home about eight o'clock. Music was furnished by the Cadet band.

The tenement houses near the Bleachery were sold at auction last Friday. Bat Connors bought one for $70, and will be taken to Salem, and another was sold to Mr. O'Hara for $30, and will rest permanently on Midway street. No bids were obtained on the other two.

The tax bills are not yet issued, but there is one enterprising lady paid her tax already. She had a brother come over from the old country, and he said if she would get him a job, he would pay her taxes. A job was speedily secured on the highways and the lady made happy by having her taxes paid.

The police have adopted a new regulation whistle to be used in place of the old style. With this a call can be given making different sounds. Fourth of July the police were much annoyed by bicycle riders, who use the old whistle, and it is said that the specials chased bicycle riders half a mile or more at a time, before discovering their mistake.

The Seventeenth Mass. Regiment will hold its annual reunion at the Willows, Salem, on Saturday, the 23rd of August. The oldest member of the regiment is a Mr. McCarthy, of Peabody, in his seventy-second year. At this forthcoming reunion the boys will be addressed by their former Colonel, Henry Splaine of Boston, Congressman Lovering of Lynn, Comrade Patch and others.

Mr. Abram Gage, an old and respected resident of Andover street, died at the residence of Daniel Buxton last Monday night, at the age of 74 years, after a short illness of pneumonia Mr. Gage was a kind neighbor and had many friends. For many years he did clock repairing in a little shoe maker's shop near the Andover street bridge, and later has assisted in the undertaking business. His funeral took place this afternoon.

The Putnam berry party made their annual journey to Ipswich yesterday and returned shortly after nine o'clock with a large supply of very fine berries. They say the fruit was never more abundant than this year.

It may be of interest to know what our water pipes are made of. The pipe is made of sheet iron lined with cement and then laid in cement, which entirely excludes it from the air and prevents it from rusting. With its inner coating of cement its full size remains for water delivery, there being no chance for filling up by oxidization. The water is not let on for thirty or forty days after the pipe is laid.

Aunt Sally Richardson observed her 82d birthday on Thursday. A large number of friends were present and wished her a pleasant journey through coming years. The Globe correspondent in speaking of it says: The late Parker Richardson, the well known Abolitionist, was a brother, and I remember well his telling me about an anti-slavery lecture that he attended in Boston, walking there after a day's work and home again after the lecture, a distance of thirty-two miles, and doing his work next day. This was before the days of railroads in this town.

The Board of Health voted last night that the bone liquor that is transported between Upton's Glue Works and Dane & Marsh factory, be in some odorless conveyance, and that the carting of bones and refuse meat to the factory be done in an air tight team. They ordered Dane & Marsh to keep their place clean and sweet or remove from town. They also voted to request Upton's Glue works to dry their hair on some other field than the one on Washington street, where it will not interfere with the public, and also instructed them not to burn glue grounds under the boilers.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Foote have the sympathy of the community in their great loss, in the death of their son, Arthur W., who died of Bright's disease last Thursday morning, at the age of 14 years and 6 months. He was a favorite with all his young companions, and was a member of the junior class in the high school. He had a pleasant disposition, and though suffering from the disease for a long time, he was patient and cheerful. His funeral took place from the home of his parents on Holten street, last Sunday, and his young companions showed their sympathy by floral offerings, and attendance at the funeral.

The house on Lowell street until recently occupied by Mr. John S. Torr has lately been remodeled and will be occupied by the owner, Mr. J. A. King. This house was built in 1810 by Eben Upton. In the front hall the walls instead of being papered are painted in water colors with landscapes and marine views. These views are fully ten feet high and have been retouched by Mr. Geo. F. Ward, allowing them to retain their old colors. The banisters are solid mahogany with posts of the same material inlaid with pearl. The house is substantially built and with the modern improvements already made will be one of the most convenient ones in town. Mr. Calvin Pierce has done the carpenter work; A. W. Berry the mason work and Elbridge Kelley and D. P. Lord the plumbing.

Fly time is here, as the bald heads and babies will testify, and here are some statistics concerning the dear little insects that are interesting and instructive: Professor Bickmore has been lecturing to the public school teachers of New York on flies and mosquitoes. How does a fly fly? asked the professor. While the wing is comparatively narrow, it makes up for it in lateral motion. The wings do not beat back and forth in one plane, but make, as it were, a figure 8. The wings of a fly vibrate 330 times a second, which goes to show its muscular power. And the funny part of it is that a fly can light on the same spot on a man's bald head or wherever he may be most sensitive 331 times a second, any hour, day or night, for seven days in the week, in a season of fifty-two weeks.

The Vaughn Morocco Machine Co. of this town have just come out with new cut of their machine. They have this month placed on the market an improved machine, and now claim that they have it perfected. The improvement consists in the use of the Patent Link, Belt Chain and sprocket wheels, instead of Leather or Gum Belting and Pulleys. This gives a positive motion and avoids all the inconvenience of tightening and lacing belts. The machine has been on the market two years this month, and notwithstanding the extreme dullness of the morocco business they have sold between thirty and forty of their one thousand dollar machines, and have succeeded in getting its merits fully established in the United States and also in Europe. Their business is steadily increasing, and they are now making arrangements to manufacture also a large machine for scouring and setting leather. It is claimed that the cylinders are the only ones in use that can strike and put out morocco properly.

The Sunday Globe in speaking of the Worthen-Hyde breach of promise suit, which we mentioned last week, said, the lady referred to is Miss Carrie R. Worthen of Amesbury, and was at one time engaged to be married to Mr. Hyde and the engagement has never been broken, so far as is known to her friends. Hence this notice of a suit for breach of promise came as a surprise to all. The acquaintance was first formed in 1878, while they were both attending the Conservatory in Boston, and he has since visited her at her home and also corresponded with her since. The engagement is understood to have been made in 1879, and renewed the following year, previous to his going to Europe to finish his musical education, which necessitated his being absent for about two years. During this time they corresponded regularly. Miss Worthen is supposed to still have the letters and an engagement ring in her possession. It is believed that the gentleman's parents were averse to the match. Miss Worthen is a lady apparently between 25 and 30 years of age, well educated and of abilities above the average, the daughter of a well-to-do farmer, and has herself taught a private school and also classes in voice culture. The most curious part of the whole affair is that she declines to say anything about the subject, averring that she has no knowledge whatever of any such suit being brought, which fact has the effect of making people still more interested in the case. We think that Miss Worthen was a teacher in the Center school, while a resident of this town.

Poet's Corner.

The Light of the After-Glow.

BY J. C. WINSCOMBE.

When the last red star of the sunset
  Has sunk 'neath the shifting sea,
And its golden path on the ocean
  Is a thing that has ceased to be.
Then over the motionless ether,
  And over the restless flow,
Comes the light that God made—and mortals
  Have christened the after-glow.

Soft skies that grow pale for a moment,
  Soft clouds that grow strange with a light,
Part rose from the clasp of the sunset,
  Part wan from the kisses of night,
Like love when the first flush is over
  Is the stillness above and below;
And a sense of new longing and languor
  Is born of the after glow.

The sun and the old loves have faded,
  The new, like the moonlight, are cold;
And my heart is borne back on the ocean,
  To the graces and glories of old.
When a rose was a rose to the seeming,
  'Ere time brought its weeds and its woe;
And left me all lonely to linger
  In the light of the after-glow.

The Moral Warfare.

WHITTIER.

When Freedom, on her natal day,
Within her war rocked cradle lay,
An iron race around her stood,
Baptized her infant brow in blood;
And, through the storm which round her swept
Their constant ward and watching kept.

Then, where our quiet herds repose,
The roar of baleful battle rose,
And brethren of a common tongue
To mortal strife as tigers sprung;
And every gift on Freedom's shrine
Was man for beast and blood for wine!

Our fathers to their graves have gone;
Their strife is past—their triumphs won;
But sterner trials wait the race
Which rises in their honored place;—
A moral warfare with the crime
And folly of an evil time.

So let it be. In God's own might
We gird us for the coming fight;
And, strong in him whose cause is ours
In conflict with the unholy powers,
We grasp the weapons He has given,—
The Light, and Truth, and Love of Heaven.

'TWAS EVER THUS.

When the winds are cold, and chill, and wet,
  The iceman ne'er your house will miss;
The piece of ice you always get
  Is large and shapely, just like this:

But when 'tis awful burning hot,
  And sultry winds the parched earth kiss,
In case you are not clean forgot,
  You get a little chunk like this.

Selected Story.

A Girl's Heart.

BY CLYDE RAYMOND.

It's as true as preachin', Miss Perkins. That girl's ackchilly fell in love at last. If you'd a-seen her a-blushin, yesterday, when she happened to meet him jest in front of my house, an' he turned an' walked by her side so perlite-like, you'd allow I was speakin' Gospel truth.

I shouldn't wonder a bit, Miss Spriggs, returned Miss Perkins, in a tone of perfect assent. I've noticed myself that she's kept him on her string longer'n any of her other beaux. Well, it's to be hoped she is in earnest this time; for, to my thinkin', that girl hez had a scandalous career a-flirtin', and the sooner she gives it up an' settles down, the better fur herself, 'less she wants to be left in the lurch, and die an old maid in the long run.

My opinion to a T, Miss Perkins, replied Miss Spriggs, with an emphatic compression of her thin lips. It's a livin' wonder that she hain't regularly scandalized the town long afore this; a beau to-night to take her to a party, another chap a-settin' by her side to-morrer night at the concert, an' still another feller a-takin' out a-buggy riding the next day. It's only charity and the lack of ill-natured gossips in this town what's kept her reppytation from suffering long ago.

Jest what I was a-going to say, Miss Spriggs, chimed in Miss Perkins, handing up her cup to be refilled for the third time.

And so these two worthies piously continued to pull to pieces the reppytation of the particular object of their charitableness, just as that self-same young person wss pulled to pieces at many another sanctimonious tea-table day after day.

In truth, Annabel Ray was a perfect little madcap. Everybody declared that she had no heart—and possibly she herself believed it, for she took no pains to contradict the verdict of the gossips, either by word or deed.

She was twenty—quite—and yet no one could say that she had ever bowed at any masculine shrine, though many were the masculine unfortunates who had knelt at hers.

No; her step was as light, her laugh as merry, and her clear, dark-fringed gray eyes as sparkling and full of mischief as though no such thing as love existed to play havoc with human hearts.

Until now; at last it did seem that Cupid had called a halt, and Annabel was suspected of having yielded to his little godship's command.

Certain it was that the tell-tale blush often rushed to her fair cheek at the sound of Mark Thorne's voice or name, and those fearless, mischief-brimming gray eyes fell bashfully beneath his glance. Others beside the unfailing gossips observed these significant signs, and many of the young lady's rejected suitors looked upon Thorne as the coming happy man.

At the very moment when her foibles were being so charitably overhauled at good Miss Spriggs' tea table, Miss Annable was indulging a sweet little hope of her own in connection with some exquisite hot house flowers which diffused their rich fragance from a vase standing on the little buhl table at her side. Her eyes covertly turned to them again and again as she sat talking with a pale, pretty young girl who had come to visit her—a delicate, sweet faced creature who looked fragile enough for a spirit, as contrasted with merry, blooming Annabel, to whose care-free heart she was as dear as any girlish chum could well be.

How often your glance wanders to those flowers, Annabel! she exclaimed, suddenly breaking off, with an amused smile, in the midst of a girlish confidence. If I did not know how incorrigible you are I should certainly believe there was some tender sentiment connected with the donor.

But they are so beautiful, explained Annabel, with a light laugh and a rising color which she managed to hide by bending over to inhale their perfume; and in this slow-going town such tasteful and costly gifts are not an every-day occurrence. But go on with your story Sylvie. You were saying that last Summer was the happiest one you ever knew; and from the tender way in which you spoke of the gentleman you met so frequently, I am inclined to think he had something to do with your happiness.

And Annabel smiled roguishly as she thus turned the tables upon her gentle little friend, diverting her attention from the flowers which had, indeed been sent to her that morning with a tiny, twisted note hidden in their perfumed leaves:

If I shall have the happiness of seeing you wear my flowers to-night, it said, then I shall dare to speak of what you must know is in my heart. Otherwise I shall know that my fate is settled without words. Ever yours, M. T.

And Annabel—madcap though she was, and used to all varieties of proposals—could not recall those lines without a conscious thrill, nor even at the flowers without the tell tale blush crimsoning her pretty cheeks. No wonder she did not care to have the subject pressed too closely!

Well, Sylvie, do you dare say that my guess was a wrong one? she exclaimed, banteringly, as the girl's delicate face suddenly took on the color of a bright red rose.

No, Annabel, was the low heisitating answer, after a moment of abashed silence. I may as well confess, as I never could keep a secret from you, anyway. Well, then, it was his presence, his sympathizing companionship, that made life so much brighter to me; and oh! clasping her small, transparent hands and speaking very earnestly, if I thought I should never see him again, I should not care to live at all!

Then you are not sure of meeting him again—you are not engaged? asked Annabel, gently, struck by the mournful accent in her friend's low voice.

No, she replied. He went away without leaving any positive assurance that we should meet again, though something tells me we shall.

The flirt! indignantly cried Annabel, who, whatever her own failings in that direction, considered such weakness in a man base and contemptible.

No, no, corrected Sylvie, hastily. You misjudge him, Annabel—indeed you do. He is the soul of honor, and it was rather my own loneliness that caused me to weave a romance out of his tender, sympathizing attentions, of which he, perhaps never dreamed; and yet, musingly, while the soft flush grew deeper in her delicate cheek, I have always had faith that he would some time return my—affection if we were to meet often, or if no other love should suddenly come between.

Then I'll take back all my hard thoughts against him, and hope you will soon meet again, exclaimed Annabel, gayly to hide her own emotion, for this fragile little creature was very dear to her; and now Sylvie, for our tea, as a bell tinkled cheerily below; and then I will help dress you for the party, as I want you to look your very prettiest this evening.

Annabel's critics would scarce ly have recognized her that night, had they seen the soft blush on her cheek, the sweet love-light in those brilliant eyes, as she fastened a cluster of Mark Thorne's flowers in her dark hair, and another in her bosom, kissing them first, and like any ordinary girl in love, murmuring over and over to herself the name that would soon be hers.

Ah! this must be the love I have heard so much about, and have always laughed at, she thought, smiling softly at the radiant image reflected in her mirror. So you're a victim at last, Miss Annabel! But then, my hero is Mark—which makes all the difference in the world, she added, laughing.

Just as if every other girl on earth, doesn't think the same thing of her lover when she falls in love.

A little later, as Annabel and her fair visitor, each very lovely in her own particular style, entered Mrs. Cittenden's elegant parlors, there was a general buzz of admiration. Sylvie Channing looked pure and spirituelle in pale, gauzy blue, while Annabel in delicate shell-pink was indescribably bewitching, but she was the acknowledged belle whenever she appeared.

Look, look, Annabel! whispered Sylvie agitatedly, as they turned away after greeting their hostess. There he is—the one I was telling you of this afternoon! Isn't he handsome?

Which one? asked Annabel following her glance with interest. That? Oh, no, you must be mistaken, dear. That is Mark Thorne.

Yes, Mark Thorne—that was his name, returned Sylvie, her slight form trembling with excitement. Oh, Annabel, how glad he seems to meet me again! Don't you see?

For one brief second Annabel stood dazed and speechless, then:

I will leave you to meet him alone dear, she whispered, and hurried to the dressing room, from which she did not emerge again for a full half hour. When she did re-appear, Sylvie was among the first to join her.

How long you have been away! she remarked, with a happy smile lighting up her sweet face, as she met her friend's inquiring glance. Mr. Thorne seemed disappointed at your leaving just as he came up. Oh, Annabel, I do think my foolish dreams may come true after all. Why, what has become of your flowers? with a little start of surprise as she suddenly missed them.

Oh, I took them off in the dress-rooms, said Annabel, trying to speak carelessly. I felt sick and faint a little while ago and thought possibly they caused it.

But, for once, a mute agony shone in the depths of those fearless saucy gray eyes when Mark Thorne passed her by with the coolest of recognitions and a glance that told her how immeasurably she had fallen in his esteem. But yielding to an irresistible impulse of her heart, she tapped his arm lightly with her fan.

Let us be friends still; Mr. Thorne she began, almost pleadingly, as he courteously obeyed her timid signal and stepped back a little out of the gay, moving throng to a place by her side.

Friends! he echoed, bitterly. Then lowering his voice, he added cuttingly: Was it really necessary Miss Ray to descend to a coquette's cheap trick and cheat me with false hopes for the moment, that my humiliation might be all the more crushing when it came? For you certainly wore flowers, when I first caught sight of you this evening.

May you not be mistaken? she asked gently. I had no intention of deceiving you for a single moment. I did wear some flowers, it is true, but—

Pardon me, he interrupted coldly, I am not blind Miss Annable.

Her red lips quivered piteously for an instant, but she lifted her small dark head with a haughty movement.

Very well, she returned, with a coolness equal to his own. I am accustomed to such misconstructions. I can bear it from you also, I suppose. Fortunately for me, perhaps, my nature is not so sensitive and loving as my little friend's there, with a motion of her fan toward Sylvie who was dancing not far away, or I could have survived all the hard things that have been said of me. By the way, I imagined she is greatly changed since I saw her a few months ago, she continued as naturally as if she had not purposely led up to the subject. Some love romance I fear, and she is so delicate that a disappointment of that kind would surely kill her.

Annabel's eyes were fixed earnestly upon her little friend as she spoke, but she did not fail to perceive the sudden start her listener gave, nor the quick startled look which he turned upon the gentle spirituelle girl.

Presently Annabel saw them dancing together, and the tender devotion of Thorne's manner, and the perfect indescribable content expressed in Sylvie's lovely face, seemed to afford her some satisfaction, for a pleased smile flitted across her lips, albeit it was quickly followed by the heaviest kind of a sigh.

Of course the sudden ending of Annabel's affair with Mark Thorne, furnished more than the usual amount of gossip. Some declared that she was up to her old tricks again, while others, in view of the gentleman's marked attentions to pretty Sylvie Channing, hastened to air their belief that at last, Miss Annabel was beat at her own game, and had been ignominiously jilted for a rival.

However that was, the object of all their gossip went her way pretty much as usual, though she was never again quite the same reckless madcap Annabel as of old. Sometimes the gayest laugh would end abruptly in a sigh, and a tear would be bravely winked back in those dazzling gray eyes. But when Mark Thorne and Sylvie Channing were married, as they were after a brief courtship, Annabel's was the warmest kiss that greeted the happy bride, and her witching face wore its gayest smiles as she cordially shook hands with the handsome bridegroom.

After the wedding they did not see each other very often, as Mark and his bride made their home in another town. Years passed on and the prophecy of good Miss Perkins was of a verity fulfilled; for Annabel Ray had reached the mature age of twenty-nine and was still unmarried.

Once Sylvie had said to her: Why don't you marry, Annabel? You've no idea how much happier you would be.. Mark says you are such a heartless coquette that you are incapable of loving any one, but I know better.

Well, never mind, dear, was the smiling answer. I know Mark's bad opinion of me, but I can stand it so long as you are happy. That's all the reward I ask.

Which struck Sylvie as a queer answer, but she was too absorbed in her love for Mark to think of it long. Besides Annabel was so different from other girls. Mark's inability to appreciate her dearest friend was his only fault in Sylvie's adoring eyes.

And now Sylvie was in her peaceful grave, while Annable Ray was still talked of and censured for her persistence in clinging to her freedom as she expressed it. No longer the gay ringleader of every frolic, as of old, but a lovely spirited woman of nearly thirty, every one knew that she could yet boast of more eligible offers than any younger belle in the place.

And one day she was brought face to face with that episode in her career which people supposed she had long since heartlessly forgotten.

She was returning home from a call when, nearing her own gate, she observed a gentleman passing slowly by it with his gaze fixed yearningly upon the house.

The sound of her footsteps on the crisp ground startled him; he turned and found himself face to face with the girl who had cruelly jilted him years ago. It was the first time they had met since Sylvie's death.

A deep flush rose quickly to his very brow—a flush of annoyance that she should have caught him thus betraying a lingering interest that concerned herself. She read it aright, but controlled, by a sudden irresistible impulse, she hastened forward, extending her gloved hand with a smile of welcome.

This is a great surprise, Mr. Thorne, she exclaimed, pleasantly, just as though she were speaking to an ordinary friend. Will you not come in? I am sure mother will be as pleased as I to see you.

He was going to decline, but a glance into Annabel's fair face, bright with the color and sparkle of the Wintry day, called up such hosts of old, sweet memories in his breast that he felt he would give much to live over one half hour, even of his golden youth.

Why not? It would only be a confession of weakness to refuse; and I am surely proof against her wiles now, he thought, to excuse his yielding to himself, for his proud resentment toward her had never wholly died out.

But there was no trace of coquetry about Annabel now, he was forced to admit, as they sat talking together in the cozy, well remembered parlor. Mrs. Ray had gone up stairs for her afternoon nap, so those two, who had once been lovers, had the room to themselves, and their conversation turned upon old friends, and by and by, they spoke tenderly of Sylvie—his pretty, lost wife.

Dear little Sylvie! Annabel said softly, as bright tears sprang to her lovely gray eyes, I am glad to know that her life was full of happiness, brief as it was. Hers was a perfect love, Mark. I think grief would have killed her if anything prevented her becoming your wife. You remember that night—

But here Annabel stopped with a painfully vivid blush. Mark seeing it, understood the reference only too well, and instantly his pride was up in arms.

I do not care to be remembered of that night, Miss Ray, he said, in a cold, abrupt way that was positively rude.

But that very rudeness thrilled Annabel's heart with a strange rapture. If he had been indifferent she would not have cared to undeceive him as to the part she had played that memorable night. But that haughty, resentful air did not mean indifference. It showed that the old wound still rankled. Now, at least, she would set herself right in his eyes, and then—well, she would feel happier, whatever the result.

I know what you have always thought of me, she said hurriedly, with averted eyes. But I—what if I could prove to you that you have been wrong? It is always painful to be misjudged by those whom we—esteem.

That I have wronged you? he repeated with a curious, bewildered look. How? What can you mean?

Wait here a moment, she answered.

Then she rose in a kind of nervous haste, and flitted from the room.

But soon she reappeared with a bunch of withered flowers and a tiny note, yellow with age, and held them up, half shrinkingly, before his wondering eyes.

Do you know them? she asked, in a voice that quivered pathetically in spite of all her efforts to steady it.

Rheumatism

It is an established fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven an invaluable remedy in many severe cases of rheumatism, effecting remarkable cures by its powerful action in correcting the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and purifying and enriching the vital fluid.

It is certainly fair to assume that what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for others it will do for you. Therefore, if you suffer the pains and aches of rheumatism, give this potent remedy a fair trial.

A Positive Cure.

"I was troubled very much with rheumatism in my hips, ankles, and wrists. I could hardly walk, and was confined to my bed a good deal of the time. Being recommended to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, I took four bottles and am perfectly well. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as one of the best blood purifiers in the world." W. F. WOOD, Bloomington, Ill.

For Twenty Years

I have been afflicted with rheumatism. Before 1883 I found no relief, but grew worse. I then began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it did me more good than all the other medicine I ever had." H. T. BALCOM, Shirley, Mass.

"I suffered from what the doctors called muscular rheumatism. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and am entirely cured." J. V. A. PROUDFOOT, letter carrier, Chicago, Ill.

My flowers—the very flowers I sent you that night, Annabel? he exclaimed, questioningly, as he recognized the faded note.

Yes; and you were not wrong when you declared you saw them on me. I did wear them to the party in answer to your wish; but, Mark, we had scarcely entered the room that evening before I learned poor little Sylvie's secret—that you were the hero whom she loved so passionately that to have lost you would have broken her heart. Flirt, coquette, I may have been, as people said, but—

Hush! cried Mark, as a great flood of light and rapture broke over his handsome face. I see it all now—what I never dreamed of before. You sacrificed yourself to Sylvie's happiness. Oh, my true, noble hearted darling, his voice trembling and choked with emotion, how cruelly I have misjudged you!

And, with a low cry of unspeakable joy, he opened his arms and drew her close, close to his throbbing heart.

How could you help it? You were not to blame, she answered, softly. But in Sylvie's perfect happiness I found my reward; and you—you loved her, Mark?

Yes, in a certain way, I did, he answered, slowly. I hope and believe that I rendered her life happy But no other woman—not even Sylvie—could ever fill your place in my heart, dearest Annabel; and you—have you really loved me all these years? he asked, holding her off a little, and gazing wistfully into her blushing face.

You see I have never married, she returned, with an arch smile. Then, seriously and sweetly: Yes, I loved you then, Mark—I have loved you always.

A printer recently walked into a certain business house on his rounds to see who desired anything in the way of advertising, and noticed that a drummer stood by the counter with his sample case ready to open. "Anything you desire in the paper this week?" inquired the printer. "No," said the business (?) man, "I don't believe in advertising. I wouldn't give a d—n for all the advertising." The drummer waited until the printer was half way to the door and then slowly taking up his sample case, remarked, "Well, that lets me out, I do not care to sell on time to any man who, in this enlightened age, does not believe in advertising. I prefer to deal with live men. When I want to strike up a trade with a dead man I'll go to the graveyard and swap tombstones. Good day, sir." —Arkansaw Franklin Tidings.

Deacon (cordially)—Certainly, my dear sir; speak your mind freely.

Minister—I understand that you have been speculating a great deal of late. Now, aside from the danger of such a business and the consequent misery it may entail upon your family, do you consider it just the proper thing for a deacon of the—

Deacon—Yes, I admit I have speculated some. I cleared $5,000 only yesterday on a wheat transaction.

Minister (astounded)—No, is that so? What's wheat worth to-day?

Bad Drainage causes much sickness. Bad blood and improper action of the liver and kidneys is bad drainage to the human system, which Burdock Blood Bitters will remedy.

AN UNCERTAIN PROBLEM.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—It has been said that leather is the strongest element of general business in the town of Peabody. When the price of this staple production is advancing and high, general business is always prosperous, and labor finds steady and renumerative employment. On the contrary, when leather is declining and low, general business languishes and labor suffers its worst. It is not necessary to enter a history of the past, or note in weary detail the panic years, it being sufficient for us to know that for a few years before the season for a National panic, we have generally quite an active business in our staple manufacture, while for a number of years after it is exactly the reverse, all trade and industries becoming stagnant. During the year 1857, the date of the third National panic or revulsion in trade and commerce throughout the country, the leather business was on the downward grade till 1861, after which the trade again improved and was quite active during war of the rebellion. There were many of our citizens who considered the separation from the mother town, and the acceptance of the name of Peabody, as two remarkable epochs in the prosperity of the village. Be this as it may,—we are of an opinion that from 1865 to 1870 was a period of remarkable prosperity to the town. About this time our population largely increased, new school houses and dwellings were erected, tanneries were enlarged, and steam and machinery added, real estate advanced rapidly in valuation, while tenements were in great demand, and rents enormously high. This continued till September, 1873, when we had the culmination, the date of the fourth National panic and reaction, in all trades and industries. In 1878 and 1879 there was a change for the better, which continued till 1882, when the town experienced another decline in its staple manufacture, which is still going on, and we have not yet reached "hard-pan." In all probability there will be no great improvement in the leather business till after the presidential election of 1883, the date for the lowest limit of the present panic, when after this, business will boom; and there will be a general revival in all trades and manufactures. Let the thinking mind of the far-seeing business man call into action all his mental energies, gird himself to the herculean task, let him put forth his proudest thought, grasp the subject with a giant arm, and endeavor to forecast the future ups and downs in the staple production of the town, or the general business interests of the country for the next ten years, and see how wide he may miss his mark.

In conclusion we might say, take any trade or industry in the town where the people are free to engage in it, and not hampered by any restricting laws, and the moment that prices rise in any product or commodity, it seems that everybody, like a flock of sheep, goes in that direction, and we soon have an over-production and down goes the price for a number of years. What can be said of any one production in this respect can be applied to general business; and no matter if the town considers itself sound, and the ability of consumers to absorb and pay for their wants and luxuries; larger immigration and rapid growth; the startling fact presents itself, that the business of the town can and does stagnate, and becomes very much depressed, during the season of a National panic or of a decline in the price of the staple productions of the place. We might here add that these National or commercial revolutions are governed by a law beyond the control of man, and are confined to no creed, no party or politics. No doubt some of your readers may consider the above as a mere matter of gush or "an uncertain problem."

FRAUDULENT PRACTICES.—The Chinese are said to be the most imitative race of people in existence. Americans do not fall far behind them. There are many liquid compounds having a peculiar and original color, odor or flavor by which they are recognized, and chemistry has advanced so far that it is easy, by the help of worthless ingredients, to prepare something having the semblance of the original, but without the characteristics which render it sought after. Wines and liquors of inferior quality are often by chemical process given an appearance of age and strength which they do not possess. St. Jacobs Oil has always been recognized by a peculiar color and odor, and knowing this, many attempts have been made to imitate it by preparations having no curative power. The warnings which have been uttered on this subject should be carefully heeded.

Suppose a man marries his first wife's stepsister's aunt, what relation is he to her? Do you give it up? He's her husband.

"That tired feeling" from which you suffer so much, particularly in the morning, is entirely thrown off by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Book Notices.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for August opens with a readable and profusely illustrated article on the Bartholdi Statue, by Mr. James B. Townsend. "Within the Capes," by Ernest Ingersoll. Lieut. Hughes, of the U. S. Navy, contributes a chapter on "Our New Steel Cruisers and their Uses." A notable article is that on the "Wits and Beauties of the Eighteenth Century," by Amelia E. Barr. Another article is "A Run to Gibraltar," by C. F. Gordon Cumming. The scientific article in this number is "The Torch bearers of the Sea," by C. F. Holden. Fiction is well provided in the serial, "Of Two Evils," and five short stories. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, at 25 cents a number, or $3 a year, postpaid.

Dr. Holmes's "Two Anniversary Poems" are the most striking feature of the Atlantic for July. One is addressed to James Russell Lowell, and was delivered at the last Harvard Commencement; the other is "To the Poets who only Listen," and was read at the recent Phi Beta Kappa Dinner at Cambridge. "The New Portfolio" has developed a startling incident, Mrs. Oliphant's story is on the eve of its denouement, and Miss Murfree's "Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains" comes to a strangely pathetic ending. Warner's "On Horseback" is continued. The three more solid articles of the number are "The Port Royal of Mere Angelique," by Maria E. MacKage, "Should a College Educate?" by E. R. Sill, and a critical article by Harriet Waters Preston on Miss Ingelow and Mrs. Walford. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The American nation has a double birthright—liberty and land. Hon. George W. Julian, who has given special attention to the acts disposing of our public lands, tells the story in brief in a contribution to the North American Review for August. In the same number five medical authorities discuss the question, "Can Cholera be Averted?" Felix L. Oswald contributes a suggestive article on "The Animal Soul;" and the Rev. M. J. Savage, in "A Profane View of the Sanctum," brings an indictment against the daily press.

The Musical Herald (Boston, $1 a year) for July has some interesting miscellaneous reading matter and the following music: "Stabat Mater," English words by Laura M. Underwood; "Father of Mercy," arranged from Beethoven; and "The Brook," for the piano, by Fritz Spindler. This number has a sketch of Herr Carl Faelten, illustrated by a full page portrait.

It is a curious fact that the Magazine of American History has been obliged to print a third edition of its July number to meet the extraordinary demand for its eight introductory "War Studies." The articles on the Seventh Regiment of New York have created no little comment.

Theo. R. Davis, the celebrated war artist of the Harper Brothers, will furnish from his note-book illustrations of great value for the August number of the Magazine of American History.

100 DOSES ONE DOLLAR—Is inseparably connected with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and is true of no other medicine. It is an unanswerable argument as to strength and economy, while thousands testify to its superior blood purifying and strengthening qualities. A bottle of Hood's Sarsaparallia contains 100 doses and will last a month, while others will average to last not over a week. Hence, for economy, buy Hood's Sarsaparilla. (B)

TIRED AND LANGUID WOMEN.—How many women there are of whom these words are true: "They feel languid and tired, hardly able to bear their weight on their feet, the bloom all gone from their cheeks, irritable and cross without meaning to be, nerves all upset, worried with the children, fretted over little things, a burden to themselves, and yet with no acute disease." What a pity it is. But a few bottles of Parker's Tonic will drive all this away, and relieve the troubles peculiar to their sex.

Some one wants to know what is more disagreeable than a "woman with a crying baby?" The answer to this "is the baby."

Another murderer has confessed that he killed a man a year ago, thereby destroying the clew which the detective was working upon.

"MOTHERS SHOULD NOTE THIS." Under this caption an old physician writes to a Cincinnati Medical Journal, that in view of the fact that people living at a distance from cities are frequently obliged to resort to cough mixtures already put up for use, they should provide themselves with only such remedies as are known to be free from opiates, poisons and narcotics; thus avoiding not only danger, but even fatal results. He recommends the recently discovered Red Star Cough Cure which analyses and tests by various Boards of Health proved to be purely vegetable as well as prompt, effective and entirely harmless.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

THE ENEMIES of the Law and Order League have improved the opportunity, afforded them by Judge Aldrich's action last week in Suffolk county liquor cases, to still further prejudice the people against the League. We say opportunity—because it is one of those cases that can be turned into a strong point against the League among those who are not well acquainted with the circumstances in Suffolk county, and the methods of the League. But we believe the action of Judge Aldrich in the end will be for the benefit of the League.

The PRESS, as our readers know, is not in favor of spotters, as the term is generally understood. We believe the Law and Order League will do well to employ agents, as they call them, as little as possible. This lesson is emphasized by the result of the trials of these liquor dealers. Judge Aldrich says: "The jurors are determined not to accept the testimony of these witnesses." The League must therefore have such testimony supported by other witnesses, which in most cases can easily be done. Here we say the League will gain a victory. Because it is by learning the vulnerable points of an enemy that a general is successful in battle.

At the same time the case shows how difficult it is for the friends of Law and Order to ensure the conviction of a liquor dealer who has violated the law. Yet there are people who make great pretensions to temperance who seize this opportunity to renew their attacks on the League, when the work it is doing should command the support of all men who really desire the suppression of the liquor traffic. The evidence presented to these juries was clear; yet because it was given by men who are employed by the League, not to tempt men to crime, but to obtain evidence, the jury would not convict. It is the work of the Law and Order League having its effect. Suppose the evidence had been given by two police officers who are employed to enforce law, or to get evidence. Would the jury have believed them? Suppose these witnesses had been interested members of the League, so much so as to voluntarily obtain evidence against these liquor sellers. Would the jury have failed to convict? The answer is obvious. The jury would not convict, not because the evidence was not conclusive, not because of anything against the character of the witnesses, causing them to disbelieve the testimony, but solely because these witnesses were the so called agents of the Law and Order League. If this was or is to continue, we do not blame the Judge for adjourning the court. It is an useless waste of time. But the League will understand the obstacles to overcome, and they will overcome them. The people will understand, also, or an attempt will be made towards it by the friends of Law and Order, why it is that the jury will not convict men whom the evidence given in court clearly pronounced guilty.

We do not reflect at all upon the jury in these cases. The stream cannot rise higher than its fountain, and while this same quotation is used by such papers as the Boston Globe, to show why there should be no liquor cases tried at all, it shows to us the material of which ordinary juries are composed. We know that six people out of seven, unless they are active, interested members of the Law and Order League, do not fully understand its methods.

The testimony given in this town was obtained independent of the "agents" of the Law and Order League. The closing of our saloons was accomplished by our police force backed up by the Law and Order branch of this town. The dealers were convicted without such evidence as is given by the agents, and we believe this can be done in all towns, where there is a live League. But we can easily understand that in large cities it is more difficult to obtain evidence without compensation being given for it. And the moment a man is paid a single penny for the information by the Law and Order League, that moment he becomes a "spotter." It only shows to what straits the liquor dealers are driven; and while, as we said at the outset, we believe the League will learn a lesson by the action, and while we may not approve of the methods of the League in Boston, in toto, we cannot say with the Marblehead Messenger, that therefore we will not say a word in favor of the League. Its work alone in Peabody, if it accomplished nothing else, entitles it to the gratitude of the entire State of Massachusetts. Opposition the League expects—and bitter opposition.

No rogue e'er felt the halter draw
With good opinion of the law.

By invitation of Frank E. Farnham, Esq., several gentlemen, including the Board of Selectmen, visited the rooms of the Citizens Gas Light Company of Lynn, at 23 Market street, last evening, to witness the illuminating powers of water gas as shown by Prof. T. S. C. Lowe's new incandescent light. The room was brilliantly lighted with these burners, while in different parts were stoves and ranges for cooking and heating purposes each supplied with the water gas. The water gas used as fuel gives a blue light, and while burning there is no smell, but when allowed to escape in the room the smell is worse, if possible, than coal gas. The cost of this gas for cooking is estimated as about that of an oil stove. The ranges are so constructed that several courses can be cooked at the same time, and they average in cost from $15 to $40. They are easy to regulate, as one has only to turn a thumb screw to let on or shut off the gas. The attention of the party was more particularly called to the incandescent loop burner. There is a common lava tip burner from which comes the dull blue light of the fuel gas, and just above it and attached to it is a spiral loop of twisted metal, and the instant the fuel gas strikes this loop it glows with a very brilliant yellow light, and not a flicker could be detected, neither could it be blown out by any ordinary blowing. The Professor claims that this spiral spring or wire will last for years and never burn out. The amount of gas can also be regulated so that a good light may be obtained at a trifling expense. One was on exhibition that would only burn a foot an hour and the gas would cost but 50 cents a thousand feet. The burners on the chandeliers about the room were burning only about three feet an hour, and the light was a great deal more brilliant than ordinary gas light. Nearly an hour was spent inspecting the workings of this kind of gas and the gentlemen expressed themselves much pleased with what they had seen. Those of our readers who would like to learn more of this fuel gas are invited to inspect its operation and manufacture by calling at the company's office in Lynn or visit the several manufacturers where it is used.

We learn there is a very sad case in town, the particulars of which are as follows: A gentleman from Kentucky had a son about to graduate from Harvard College and came on to the graduation. A few days before he arrived, his son was taken violently insane and removed to the Danvers Asylum. A companion of the son in college, was a young man of this town, who invited the gentleman from the South to his home, where he had only been a day or two when he was stricken with malaria and has since been in a critical condition. Within a few days the wife of the gentleman, and a nephew, who is a noted physician, arrived in town, and he will be removed as soon as his condition is favorable.

The new statue is permissive, not mandatory. Heretofore the extreme sentence for a man has been $10 and costs or one year in the house of correction or workhouse. Massachusetts Press Association.

Correspondence of the Peabody Press.

On Saturday, July 11, the "quill drivers" of Massachusetts with their friends to the number of 110 started for a five days' trip to Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket. Soon after 11 A. M. the company began to assemble in the waiting rooms of the Old Colony Depot in Boston, and it was very soon evident that an unusually large number were to make up this, the sixteenth annual summer excursion of the Association. Two special cars attached to the 11.40 A. M. train bore the party to New Bedford. At Taunton a lunch was served on board the cars, which filled the time very pleasantly between that city and New Bedford, where the steamer Martha's Vineyard was waiting to take us to Cottage City. At 2 P. M. we steamed out of the harbor, past Farmer's Island, Clark's Point, and light house, into Buzzard's Bay. On the point is Nonquit, a summer resort, so retired that its inhabitants desire all visitors to return to the city by the same boat as they come. At Wood's Holl we take on some fifty children from Boston, going to the Vineyard for a couple of weeks at the country home. At 5 P. M. we land at Cottage City and are soon quartered at the Sea View House. This is the largest hotel on the island, having accommodations for 400 guests. It is situated upon a bluff commanding a fine view of Vineyard sound on one side and Cottage City on the other. It is estimated that over 50,000 vessels pass through the sound annually. It is the great highway for all boats plying between Boston, New York and Southern ports. It was in passing through this sound that the City of Columbus lost her course and was wrecked on the rocks of Gay Head, although the Ship Channel at this point was over four miles wide.

After supper the party took carriages for a drive about Cottage City, which is literally a city of cottages, numbering 600 or more, of all sizes and designs, besides seventeen hotels. Like ancient Gaul—it is divided into three parts, Oak Bluffs, Camp Ground and Vineyard Highlands. Oak Bluffs is the newest portion of the city, and is very tastefully laid out. It contains thirty avenues, nine parks and eight hotels. Its avenues as well as those of all Cottage City are laid in concrete, and one may ride, as we did, many miles over the smooth roads free from dust or stones. Camp Ground is the central and most densely populated portion of the city, so called because it contains the Methodist Tabernacle, which will seat 4000 people. This contains twenty-five avenues, nine parks and five hotels. Vineyard Highlands, the northern and largest part of the city, contains the Baptist Tabernacle and Camp Ground, and Agassiz Hall, a new Summer Institute, which has just opened with 400 pupils. This contains seventy-three avenues, twenty parks and three hotels. At 8 o'clock the company assembled in the spacious parlors of the hotel for the annual reunion. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mr. Loomis of Holyoke, who introduced Gov. Pingree of Vermont, who with his family was spending a few days on the island. The Governor in a very neat speech thanked the Association for its courtesy, and spoke of the pleasure that it gave him to meet so many of the solid men of the Bay State. He was followed by Senator Marden of Lowell, who spoke in his peculiar vein, not omitting to pay a touching tribute to the memory of the late Hon. Charles W. Slack, of the Boston Commonwealth. Commemorative remarks were also made by President Loomis, who read a letter from Ex President John G. Baldwin of Worcester, and Rev. B. F. McDaniel read one from Hon. N. A. Horton of Salem, both of whom spoke in the highest terms of their esteemed friend and brother. Ex-President Francis Proctor of Gloucester then presented a series of resolutions in memory of Mr. Slack, which were seconded by Mr. Edward K. Snow, his life long friend and companion. These resolutions were adopted. Remarks were also made by Insurance Commissioner Tarbox, Hon. E. A. Hall of Greenfield and others. Mr. D. G. Dexter of Cambridge read an original poem, full local incidents and peculiarities of the members present.

Sunday morning several went to the Methodist Tabernacle to hear Rev. Dr. Chadbourne of Boston, and in the afternoon there was an excursion over the narrow guage railway to Edgartown, Katama, and the south side of the island. In the evening a praise meeting was held, in the parlor of the Sea View House, led by Rev. Mr. McDaniel. Monday morning we took the steamer, Island Home, for Nantucket, bidding adieu to Cottage City, the most charming summer resort of our New England coast.

After a three hours' ride we land at the historic town of Nantucket. The first to greet us as we step upon the wharf is the town crier, who with sonorous voice informs us of the performance to be held at the skating rink the following evening. We prefer to follow our own inclinations and through

Sand to the right of us,
Sand to the left of us,
Sand in front of us,
Rode the one hundred

to the Nantucket House, where dinner was soon served. After dinner some went for a sail upon the harbor, while others visited points of interest in the town, among which latter number was your correspondent. We first climbed to the tower of the old church on the hill, from which we obtained a very fine view of the town, the island, and the ocean for several miles around. The look-out is 102 feet above the street and 150 feet above the sea evel. A watch is kept here all night to give the alarm in case of fire or the approach of vessels to the harbor. In the belfry is hung a bell, bought in Lisbon, Portugal in 1812. It weighs 1575 pounds and cost $500. A few years since a Boston church wanted it to complete a chime and offered a dollar a pound for it. But nothing would induce the people of Nantucket to part with their old bell. It has a silvery tone and for that reason is supposed to contain more valuable metal than modern bells. Other points of interest are the Museum, Old Coffin house, the old mill and numerous stores where relics and curious shells are sold. The town from 1830 to 1840, was the center of the whaling interest, and then contained 10,000 inhabitants. Since the discovery of petroleum the whale fisheries have diminished and the town suffered in consequence. Its population is now only 3000, and but very little business is done. For about two months in the summer the town is thronged with summer visitors, and then all is quiet until another year comes round.

Tuesday morning we are up bright and early for a trip by rail to "Sconset" a little fishing village on the east side of the island, and the two hours spent in wandering up and down the beach and among the fishermen's cottages will not soon be forgotton. The party made their way to the little Post Office, so small that not more than six could get in at a time, and some of us must doff our heads to enter. Our President put his head in at the window and asked the postmistress if she was an "offensive partisan." She met him half way however, by answering that she was the constituent of all good men. The postal business is quite lively here for some four months in the year and then the town settles down to its quiet until another summer shall bring its influx of visitors. Only about a dozen families stay here during the winter. One town pump supplies them with water and the only business is fishing. The summer visitor, however, has found this retreat and two hotels and about twenty cottages have materially changed the appearance of the little village. Keeping a candy store we found Capt. Coffin, the father of the Rev. Phebe Hannaford, and near by another sea captain, who has followed the sea every year until this season, for over sixty years. Many of these piscatorial cottages have very singular names, among which we noticed, Suargoloka, Clovernook, Castle Bandbox, Madequecham, Pochick, Heart's ease, etc. One church does service for any and all denominations, who may wish to hold services here, and one good old sea captain told us that until the advent of summer visitors they never needed any, as they were all Quakers and therefore good people. This is certainly one of the strangest villages we have ever seen.

After dinner we take a little steamer for a ride up the harbor. As we round the point we come in sight of the elegant country residence of cashier Chadwick, now an inmate of the Nantucket jail. His wife and children visit him every day and he receives frequent calls from his father. He has made up the $11,000 which the bank lost, but the $70,000 borrowed from individuals is beyond their reach. We land for an hour at Wauwinet, where we enjoy a sight of the breakers as they roll up on the sandy beach. In the evening we all assemble in the parlors of the Nantucket House, where Mrs. Cummings, of Somerville, engineered a very unique entertainment, consisting of songs, charades and a mock trial, in which editor Whitaker was convicted of sheep stealing. The next morning we take the seven o'clock boat for home after giving three cheers for President Loomis, who with a few others will remain a few days on the island. All unite in pronouncing this to be one of the best and most enjoyable of the summer excursions of the Massachusetts Press Gang. B.

SPARKS.

Wednesday evening the members of Abel Proctor H & L. No. 1, presented Assistant Engineer H. A. Southwick with a handsome sixty-four comb engineer's white fire hat and white rubber coat. Foreman J. H. Miller made the presentation with a short speech, which was responded to by the recipient who invited all present to repair to his residence on Lowell street, to partake of refreshments. Previous to going, the cigars and lemonade were passed around, these being provided by the company. Arriving at Mr. Southwick's, ice cream and other refreshments were set out and the boys did justice to their host's liberality. Cigars were then lighted and the party adjourned to the piazza, and a very pleasant evening passed. The party broke up about 10 o'clock with their best wishes to the engineer.

The driveway into the house of Hose 4 has been concreted by Hiram Hook. It needed some improvement.

An alarm of fire in Salem at six o'clock Sunday morning caused Hose 5 to ring their bell, and start out with their new wagon, getting nearly down to the Square. They thought one of the Peabody bells was ringing.

The steamers have been burning coal for the past few days, which has been laying in the coal shed upwards of ten years.

Chief Engineer John H. Tibbetts has embarked in a new business, having bought out the fish market on Foster street, formerly owned by William J. Roome.

The steamers have been in service pumping water for the town for over twenty hours. We wonder what is thought now, about there being no need of steamers, with the high service? Where would we have been this week without them?

One of the Salem steamers was ordered to be in readiness to come to Peabody in case of an alarm of fire, after the breaking down of Steamer 1, on Monday night, by Chief Osborne, at the request of Chief Tibbetts. An extra pair of horses was put into the Central station to use on Steamer 2, as soon as the condition of things was discovered. Z

The Congregationalist has worried so over the alleged new departure at Andover and the advance of public sentiment in relation to the brimstone business, that it has ruined its digestion and become a grumbling, grunting old-grannyish Pharisee. It lectures the country press on the trivality of its news, thinking the whitewashing of the Hardback orthodox vestry of infinite more consequence than John Smith's shingling his barn. It delivers a two-column lecture on the need of brevity and condensation; and finally goes into hysterical spasms over the lack of Christianty in the secular press.—Southbridge Journal.

It is to be hoped that a law will be enacted by the next Legislature, compelling every railroad corporation to place a gate at every place where the public highway crosses on the same grade, so that reckless or ignorant drivers cannot be on the track when a train is passing. The recent collision at Winthrop Junction and a later one at Salem, by which so many lives were lost, should awaken interest in favor of such precautions for the public safety.—Lynn Union.

It is a fact which few people would credit, yet nevertheless true, that the Friday superstition is deeply rooted among people whom one would suppose were far above such folly. There is scarcely ever a marriage license issued on Friday. Ticket brokers well know that no one starts on a long journey on Friday, as a rule. People make short trips on that day, and drummers keep on the wing, but those who travel for pleasure, and especially women, avoid a start on Friday.

At this season the formula for a cholera mixture prescribed by Mr. Dana of the New York Sun may be of interest. It is: Take equal parts of tincture of cayenne, tincture of opium, tincture of rhubarb, essence of peppermint, and spirits of camphor. Mix well. Dose fifteen to thirty drops in a wineglass of water, according to age and violence of attack. Repeat every fifteen or twenty minutes until relief is obtained.

Experienced lumbermen have always held that timber cut in the spring was not durable for building purposes. Recent scientific investigation sustain this belief. It is shown that the richer the wood is in phosphoric acid and potassium the more likely it is to rot and mold; wood cut in the spring contains eight times as much of the latter as when cut in the winter.

It is announced that Mr. Henry C. Barnabee, the well-known singer, is to be associated in the ownership and management of the new Glen House. There will be no interference with his musical engagements.

The accident that befel the steamer Empire State by running on to a heavy log that was almost entirely concealed under water, which disabled one of her wheels, prevented her resuming her trips. But to assure their numerous patrons a day's pleasure, the management chartered the elegant steamer Cambridge and made the excursion to Provincetown last Sunday. Thus far this season the Empire State has received a large patronage.

It has been truly said, that when an editor makes a mistake in his paper, all the world sees and calls him a fool. When a private citizen makes a mistake, nobody knows it except a few friends, and they come around and ask the editor to keep it out of the paper. When a private citizen dies, the editor is asked to write of his good qualities and leave the bad out. When the editor dies, the private citizen says: "Now that darn liar will get his deserts."

HOME HAPPENINGS.

A break in the 16 inch water main leading from the pumping station to the main pipe occurred Saturday afternoon and had only been repaired a few hours when a second break took place in the T connecting the 16 inch main and the supply pipe from the pumps. A new casting had to be made and awaiting it the town is without high service water. Salem refused the town a supply except for fire purposes. The superintendent next turned to Danvers and received permission to take water from them. Another delay was occasioned because the pipes were not connected. They had frozen up last winter and instead of repairing them a piece of pipe had been taken out and the end of the other plugged. A gang of workmen speedily made the connections. The Danvers pipe was only a four inch and run into a sixteen inch one, and the force spent itself before reaching the different sections of the town. In order that the town might be supplied so far as possible the Water Board stationed the old steamer on Monday at the hydrant in front of Dodge's fish market. This hydrant being on the old log of the low service had plenty of water. Two lines of hose were run to the hydrant on the high service pipes on Foster street in front of Wilson's machine shop and the steamer started to pump water from one to the other. This worked very successfully and the pressure which was seven pounds when they commenced showed 50 pounds when the steamer was taken off at ten o'clock. Yesterday morning the pressure had run down to 14 pounds and Steamer 2 was put on to do the work of Steamer No. 1 as she had broken one of the inside valves. She run eleven hours and a half with only two stops, and pumped about 500 gallons a minute. At nine o'clock when they took her off the pressure was 65 pounds and this morning the pressure was 27 pounds. The old steamer was repaired and put on again this morning and pumped into the Lowery hydrant on the square, shutting off Foster street entirely. The board were aware of the dangerous condition the T was in and it is probable if the break had not occurred as it did they would have been ready for it. South Peabody is entirely shut off and no water can be had. It was a sick looking place around the pumping statien after the break, tons of earth and rocks were scattered in all directions and the side walks gullied out to the depth of two feet or more. The mould for the cast iron cross section was made Monday, and the casting made yesterday at the South Boston Iron Works and as soon as it was cool shipped to Peabody, and arrived about two o'clock this morning. A gang of men were ready to go to work on it and at noontime the heavy casting which weighed 1400 pounds was in place and the cementing of the joints began. As we go to press the Steamer is still working and the prospect for high service water in a few hours is good.

The Baptist Parsonage society are in considerable trouble, and as we learn the particulars, they are as follows: Mrs. Sutton was willing to sell them the site selected for their parsonage on Summer street, on condition that the old buildings be removed and a suitable one erected. The society in the meantime having decided to buy the property, put up the buildings at auction and the house was sold to Mr. S. F. Blaney, who announced his intention of placing it in the rear of his block and work was begun on the cellar. As the deeds for the property had not passed, Mrs. Sutton has refused to sign them, as she thought her property, which adjoins, would not be improved by having the old tenement house moved only a few feet away from where it now stands. The society have been trying to buy the house back from Mr. Blaney and also, we learn, have offered to take his land at a price largely in excess of its value, but can get no definite answer from him. On the other hand it is said, Mr. Blaney is willing to buy the whole property and pay a fair price for it. As Mr. Blaney has commenced on his cellar it is probable that he will put up a tenement house on his land if he can't have the old house he bought. This is the way the matter stands at present, and it looks as if it was likely to remain so.

SOUTH PEABODY.

The late Benjamin Osborne left by will, a fund for the perpetual care of the family lot in Cedar Grove Cemetery. Mr. Osborne was the last of his family, and but for this timely provision the lot might be neglected. This is the first instance of an endowment of a lot in our beautiful cemetery, and we hope it will be a reminder to many others, to provide for the care of their lots, when they shall be called to occupy them. We can call to mind several lots in a neighboring cemetery, whose owners left a good property, but at their disease it was scattered, and now their lots are untidy and neglected, when a small fund would have kept them nice, and have added so much, to the beauty of the whole cemetery.

Mr. J. B. Wilson is spending his vacation among the green hills of New Hampshire.

Mr. D. H. Whipple is acting as temporary clerk for Samuel Trask.

It is very dusty here, on account of the break down in the water works people have not used their hose. We have not been without water a very great while at a time, depending on a four inch connection with Danvers, the supply is very scant.

The selectmen and superintendent of streets visited Andover street last Friday to investigate a complaint made by abutters, that there was danger from driving from their yards, and several ways. The Selectmen will confer with the Railroad company, and ask them to fix the driveways leading to the different estates. An underground drain will be put in, and the hydrant near Pike and Whipple's set back.

Of this amount $168.25 was subscribed at the Bleachery where her husband was employed and the balance outside. Besides this, we learn that Mr. J. ASBURY GROVE NOTES.

The protecting shade and forest air at Asbury Grove is grateful this hot weather.

The people in crowds are not at Asbury Grove this year. The hard times tell.

The Peabody tent is covered and supplied with tables, and the stove is put in order for the convenience of any of the society who may wish to spend a few days at the grove, but who do not feel able to hire a cottage or to board.

The religious meetings held in the grove under the direction of Rev. C. L. Eastman are unusually well attended and full of interest.

The grounds and avenues are now being cleaned and rubbish removed, preparatory to the coming camp meetings, which begins on the 21st of August.

Several ministers are upon the ground seeking rest and recreation, but soon to return to their field of labor.

LOUIS PHILIPPE'S FLIGHT.

In the collection of Adolphe Cremieux's letters and sayings, recently published under the title of "En 1848," there is a passage giving some hitherto unpublished details of Louis Philippe's flight from the Tuileries. The passage runs as follows: "After several vain interviews with the King, Cremieux arrived once more at the Tuileries just as the mob was pouring into the Place de Caroussal and a butchery beginning. He was met by the Duc de Montpensier, who asked what had happened. 'I think all is lost, Monseigneur,' replied Cremieux. 'The people press forward, the troops are shooting at only one place close by. The King must try to save himself.' Louis Philippe had heard what was said, and when Cremieux approached was already changing his uniform for a black suit and had taken off his Order of the Legion of Honor. The Queen was present, and was soon joined by several ladies weeping, and dressed in mourning. The Duchess de Montpensier threw herself into her husband's arms, who requested Cremieux to lead her, but this was prevented by M. de Lastevrie, who came forward. The representative of the people, so soon to be a member of the Provisional Government, begged the royal family to hasten their preparations, and received a bitter reply from the Queen. 'You misjudge my impatience, madame,' said Cremieux; 'the danger in which the King stands is my excuse.' Four ladies, of whom one must have been the Duchess de Nemours, and each of whom had a child in her arms, were still in the room. Orders were issued for four carriages to wait in the Place de la Concorde. The King asked for his keys, and a bunch was brought; he took a large portfolio from the table, and the company entered a passage leading to the garden; Cremieux foremost with the Duc de Montpensier, then the King and Queen, and, lastly, the ladies and children. The Tuileries garden was reached through the Pavillon de l'Horloge. National Guards on foot and horseback silently saluted. 'Do you think we run any danger?' The Duc de Montpensier asked Cremieux, who, encouraging him, promised to accompany the party as far as St. Cloud. In the Place de la Concorde only one carriage was waiting, and was immediately entered by the Duchess de Nemours, with three other ladies and the children. 'What is to become of the King and Queen?' cried the Duc de Montpensier. The King, who only now became aware of the state of the case ran up to the carriage, tore open the door, and exclaimed: 'Get out, all of you.' The occupants at once obeyed, and Louis Philippe and the Queen hastily took their places. One of the ladies, probably the Duchess de Nemours and her child were thrust in after, and the King cried 'Drive on!' The coachman did not hear. Cremieux repeated the order, and the horses were driven off at a sharp trot. When Cremieux turned round the Place de la Concorde was almost empty. The Duc de Montpensier, who seemingly had found another carriage, had disappeared with the rest of the family. For a moment Cremieux remained standing quite amazed at the sudden solution of the difficulty, and then catching sight of the Palais Bourbon on the other side of the Seine, he remembered his next pressing duty. Shortly after he announced the flight of the royal family to the Chamber.

EARLY MARRIAGE.

Lady Sarah Cadogan, daughter of William, first Earl Cadogan, was married at the age of thirteen, to Charles, second Duke of Richmond, aged eighteen. It is said that this marriage was a bargain to cancel a gambling debt between their parents, Lady Sarah being a co-heiress. The young Lord March was brought from college and the little lady from her nursery for the ceremony, which took place at the Hague. The bride was amazed and silent, but the husband exclaimed, "Surely you are not going to marry me to that dowdy?" Married, however, he was, and his tutor then took him off to the Continent, and the bride went back to her mother. Three years after Lord March returned from his travels, but having such a disagreeable recollection of his wife was in no hurry to join her, and went the first evening to the theatre. There he saw a lady so beautiful that he asked who she was. "The reigning toast, Lady March," was the answer he got. He hastened to claim her, and their lifelong affection for each other is much commented upon by contemporaneous writers—indeed it was said that the Duchess, who only survived him a year, died of grief.

MEASURING BY THE EYE.

It is a most excellent practice for boys and girls to judge of the size and weight of common articles by the eye. Let some one hold up a cane and guess its length, and see how varied the answers will be. A country school master was in the habit of measuring a scholar's height, and having the other pupils mark the height on the wall. He would also mark off an inch, a foot, or a yard in some conspicuous place, and then see how near anybody could come to chalking the same length upon the black-board. If asked which was the taller, a barrel of flour or a three-year old child, how many would answer correctly? Weights can be learned by packages which are carried home from the store, and the tea table talk can be made interesting by guessing how much liquid the cups and pitchers will hold.

Herbert Spencer says Americans are so driven by business cares that they never stop to leisurely examine anything. Guess he never saw five or six hundred busy Americans standing around for two hours watching three men raising an office safe to a fourth-story window.

Smoking makes small boys and mosquitoes sick.

SECOND-HAND SHOPS IN PARIS.

There has been a good deal said and written about Parisian shops, but there is one division of these tempting establishments that has received but scant justice from the foreign chronicler, and that is the multitude of second hand shops wherewith Paris abounds. From the aristocratic Rue de la Paris down to the ragpickers' quarter, the Rue Mouffetard, there is not a street in the commercial quarters that does not boast of one or more of such establishments, while certain streets, such as the Rue de Provence or the Chaussee d'Antin are lined with them. They are of every grade and every style, from the lordly and elegantly and fitted-up store, whose proprietor deals only in antique cabinets, bronzes and tapestry, Louis XV. jewelry, old miniatures and ancient lace, all more or less genuine and especially the less, down to the dingy little booth stuck in a corner behind some massive building wherein old stores and old shoes are vended to whomsoever comes to buy. All the elegancies and ornaments of a lady's wardrobe, for instance, may fill one window; robes of satin and velvet, fans of point-lace and mother-of-pearl, India shawls, cleaned gloves, battered hats with crushed feathers and faded ribbons, fine point-lace and half-worn undergarments, satin slippers and Honiton handkerchiefs, all blended in one bewildering chaos. The shoes of an opera dancer are tangled up in the lace of a cardinal's robe, an ivory bound prayer book serves as a support for an inlaid box of cosmetics, a photograph album bound in plaques of malachite is half hidden under a pile of cambric sheets, and a carved crucifix reposes on a sofa-cushion of embroidered velvet side by side with a broken opera-glass. Groups and figures in imitation Dresden and plates in supposed old Rouen contend for admiration in the other window with trinkets set with pale blue sapphires, flawed diamonds, discolored pearls or dingy opals. In these windows may be read the story of half of the vanished fashions of fifty years back. The china toilet-set of the late Adelaide Neilson, for instance, every piece painted with her monogram, encircled with wreath of roses, formed for a long time the chief ornament of a bric-a-brac shop on the Rue du 4 Septembre. I can lay my hand, figuratively speaking, on the service of antique delf that the King of Holland suffered an American adventuress to carry off from one of his minor palaces.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

It is true we are told that old Parr, in the later years of his unduly prolonged life, passed nearly the whole of the twenty-four hours in semi-torpid sleep, during which, doubtless, his natural powers wasted far more slowly than they would have done had he kept awake. But sleep is one thing, artificially produced insensibility another. If, however, the wonderful discovery were real instead of imaginary; if men could at their own will be reduced to a state of absolute lifelessness for months and years together, the time thus passed being "so many unvalued and profitless years added to a lifetime," what strange results might follow! A man might extend the three score years and ten over as many centuries, being brought to life for a week or two at a time after intervals of two or three years passed in frozen lifelessness. One who found himself or supposed himself in advance of his age might be congealed until the age had overtaken or passed beyond him. A father who had been shelved for a while in the family ice vault might be restored to children older than himself. Or, again, a first-born who had displeased his father might be frozen until all his brothers had got the start of him, and reappear among men as a younger brother. But indeed there is no end of such fancies. We may safely leave their further discussion until Signor Rotura has returned from his journey to South America "for a large supply of the two necessaries for the safe conduct of his process, both of which substances at present remain a secret.

THE OLD RAIL FENCE.

I am told by foreign tourists that while many of our fences are reflected in those of other lands, the counterpart of the zigzag fence is to be seen in no other country. It is typical of Yankeeland. It is known as the shake or Virginia fence, as the reclic of a lavish era of unlimited forestry. History does not record the name of the inventor but I have long since learned to cherish a profound respect for the unknown individual. It is hard for me to imagine in the person of this primitive rail-splitter the picture of an untutored backwoodsman, and I never follow the course of one of these fences without feeling a certain consciousness that its original builder must have seen his work through eyes artistic as well as practical. The careless abandon of its lines—a repetition of form in which absolute repetition is continually defied by the capricious convolution of the grain, for there are no two rails made in the same mould—and their gray satiny sheen, their weather-beaten stains of moss and lichen and ever-changing play of lights and shadows from their waving weeds and vines, make the old rail fence truly an object of real beauty in our landscape. Often have I lingered in its angles, and a hundred times have I thought of the host of pictures and reminiscences which might fill a book to the glory of a fence-corner.

If it is true that sparrows and swallows forsake a district when cholera is about to make its advent the fact should be generally known and thoroughly established on all creditable data.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

KEEP IT PURE.

THE LIFE IS THE BLOOD—PREVENT DISEASE—SURGERY THE LAST RESORT—A TELLING LETTER.

Here is a fact for you to think over, viz.: Medical science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety they seem to have, proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints—some of them appearing almost directly opposite in their natures. When a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. But, while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.

It is conceded that DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "FAVORITE REMEDY" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from Cancer.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., March 22, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home, I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system, too, required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly commended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result surprised me, it was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since the "FAVORITE REMEDY," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that.

Yours, etc.,
MATTHEW FARRELL.
24 Adams Street.

In all cases when a consultation is deemed desirable.

Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. But, if you have not done so, adopt "FAVORITE REMEDY" as a household friend.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5. by all druggists.

The New York Commercial Bulletin not long ago spoke of agriculture in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts as "making no progress" and "virtually dying out." There never was a greater mistake. Acreage for acreage, agriculture in New England, will compare favorably to-day with any other state. In Vermont it is still the great interest; manufactures in that state with difficulty hold their own; but any one who will travel over it can see from the constant improvement in farm buildings, the handsome farm-houses and barns quite up to the Canada line, that agriculture is far from dying out. In 1884 the wheat crop of Vermont was reported at 364,500 bushels from 21,000 acres, valued at $382,725. The yield was 17.3 bushels per acre, worth $1.05 per bushel. The Minnesota farmer gets 15.3 bushels per acre, worth 50 cents a bushel. The Kansas farmer gets 16.6 bushels per acre, worth 45 cents a bushel. While the Minnesota farmer got a return per acre of $7.51, and the Kansas farmer $7.43, the Vermont farmer got 18.20 per acre. Of course the Vermont farmer has to work his ground more laboriously, but he can afford to. As to "dying out" it is a well known fact that the wheat acreage of the western states is declining, while the wheat acreage of Vermont is apparently increasing. Maine has about double the acreage and product of wheat that Vermont has. The greatest Vermont crop is oats in which she had 103,000 acres, yielding a value of $14 per acre; she had also 60,000 acres in corn yielding $20 per acre.—Springfield Republican.

One of the cheapest and most inexpensive luxuries for this season of the year is a hammock. You can get more real comfort out of a hammock than out of a soda fountain. The mere presence of a hammock on the piazza of a house gives the place an appearance of comfort that four mahogany chairs and a brussels carpet wouldn't give. The comfortable appearance is considerably increased by having somebody in the hammock. As a sleeping arrangement the hammock has lots of advantages over a bed; it is always made up, you can't fall out of it when you are asleep, and physicians say it is healthier. Somebody says that there is a proper way to get into a hammock, viz: sit down on it and throw your feet up and your back down, lie crossways. Close woven Mexican hammocks are probably the best, because they are strongest. Get one and hang it somewhere, on the piazza, out under the apple trees, over the veranda, in the barn or on the roof, put it anywhere, but get one and get into it.—Milford Gazette.

"Pa, how funny this looks in this paper. The printer has got the words all mixed up, so there is no sense to it." "No, no, my child. That is a new poem by Tennyson."

The following notice appears in a Georgia paper: "I wish to inform the people that I will close out my bar by the last of April, and now is the time to have your jugs filled to use for snake bites. Come at once. A good lot of whiskey on hand."—Ex.

A Western lecturer is speaking on "Silent Women." This is a shorter title than "Deaf and Dumb Asylums for Females," but it means the same thing.

WHAT WILL SURELY DO IT.—One's hair begins to fall out from many causes. The important question is: What is sure to make it grow in again? According to the testimony of thousands, Parker's Hair Balsam will do it. It quickly covers bald spots, restores the original color when the hair is gray or faded, eradicates dandruff, and causes the scalp to feel cool and well. It is not a dye, not greasy, highly perfumed, safe. Never disappoints those who require a nice, reliable dressing.

ROYALLY ENTERTAINED.

Some forty of the employes of Frank Cousins' Bee Hive with invited guests and Newspaper men, making in all about seventy, sat down to a banquet at the Pavilion at the Willows last Wednesday The banquet was given by Mr. Cousins in honor of his thirty-fourth birthday. The company left the Bee Hive at half past four, and after arriving at the Willows, a short time was allowed for social greetings on the broad piazza, fronting the harbor. About six o'clock the party were invited to seats at the table and Mr. Cousins and his aged mother lead the way, making a striking contrast between manhood and old age. Each one had been assigned his or her position and a neatly printed card in the plate designated it. The tables were beautifully laid with delicate china and silver ware, while beside each plate was a handsome souvenir menu, consisting of two panel cards tied with a ribbon, and the front was covered with a wide piece of satin with a "Bee Hive," in black surrounded with delicate chenille. Beside the plates also was a buttoniere. With a few words of welcome from Mr. Cousins the company commenced operations on the following menu, and three hours were spent at the table.

MENU.

Mock Turtle aux Quenelles.
Consomme a la Royal.
Boiled Salmon, Creme au Gratin.
Baked Chicken Halibut a la Rose.
Radishes, Croquets. Cucumbers.
Roast Larded Philadelphia Chicken.
Fillet of Beef aux Champignon.
Willows Cubes Fried.
Croquets of Lobster a la Macedoine.
Broiled Philadelphia Squabs a la Pavilion.
Fancy Ices. Frozen Pudding Ladies' Tips.
Charlotte Russe. Maccaroons.
Banana Meringues.
Roguefoot Cheese. Long Branch Crackers.
Infant Olives.
Strawberries. Oranges. Pine Apples. Sherbert.
Bananas. Confectionery. Coffee.

The viands were excellent, Caterer Wentworth being entitled to much credit for the quality and quantity provided, and for the floral decorations with which the tables were furnished. At the conclusion of the supper Hon. W. M. Hill arose and read a very interesting sketch of the life and business career of Mr. Cousins, and during the evening Miss Pervier in behalf of the employes presented Mr. Cousins with an elegant rosewood cane, with a solid gold head, beautifully chased and appropriately engraved. As the gentlemen arose from the table a fine Havana was passed them, around which was a slip of paper with "Frank's 34th," printed upon it. About half past nine horse cars were taken for the city and with many congratulations and wishes for his future success the company bid Frank Cousins good night.

FRANK COUSINS.

In this connection a short review of the business career of Mr. Cousins would not be out of place, and we take the following from the paper read by ex-Mayor Hill. Frank Cousins was born in Salem, June 30, 1851, at what is now 26 English street, and received his education at the Endicott and Phillips schools. In April, 1866, he left school and entered the employ of J. B. & S. D. Shepard as cash boy for his brother, Thomas, who had charge of the dress goods department. He had been in the store only about a year when he was put in charge of the calico department of Shepard's store. In June, 1868, he severed his connection there to enter the employ of his brother, Joseph H., who in company with another brother named Thomas, had started in the dry goods business in March of that year. Thomas died and his place in the firm was taken by the father of the boys. In the early part of 1872, Joseph died, and in April of the same year, being at the time only twenty years and nine months old Frank Cousins commenced business for himself in one of the three stores in the block now occupied by the "Bee Hive." At this time he had $400.87 in the Salem Five Cents Savings Bank, and this amount of money was expended to stock his store. The store was small and the stock limited, but by persistent advertising and remarkable shrewdness in buying, he kept afloat till June, 1872, when he grasped the opportunity and was brought conspicuously before the public. At that time there was a break in Japanese dress goods which were retailing for fifty cents per yard, and the jobbers sold at a great reduction, on account of a falling market. Mr. Cousins bought thousands of yards and gave them to the public at cost, selling in two days 3500 yards. This special sale first established his reputation and he was smart enough to follow it up by others, among them the famous calico sale. Calicoes costing 8 3-4 cents per yard, were selling at 10 cents. A dealer advertised a much inferior grade at 5 cents. Frank marked his best at 4 cents per yard. Advertising that on Saturday evening no other goods would be sold. A dozen clerks were employed, and the throng of purchasers blocked the door, sidewalk and street, so that the horse cars with difficulty could pass, seven police officers were on duty in front of the store, and the crowd inside was tremendous. The sale was continued one hour each forenoon for a week, the money lost was great, but the advertising of the store more than compensated. Special bargain sales have since been a feature at the Bee Hive.

After these noted sales his business increased and in 1878 he extended his business by taking in the chambers above his store and adding a millinery department. Again in 1880 he found his store too small and the store adjoining was opened as part of the "Bee Hive." In Feburary, 1881, he bought the entire stock of the dry goods store of W. C. C. Moulton and arranged his stock conveniently and liberally advertised it, closing it out in a few weeks' time. Business from this time continued to boom at the "Bee Hive" and in 1883, Mr. Cousins leased the entire building corner of St. Peter and Essex Streets and it was remodeled and today presents one of the busiest and most attractive stores in Salem. The adoption of the now familiar term "Bee Hive" was in this wise:—In the year 1873, a commercial traveller, after waiting more than two hours to find Mr. Cousins disengaged from customers, said, you should call your store "Cousins' Bee Hive," and at Mr. Cousins' suggestion, Mr. W. S. Lamson, the inventor of the Lamson cash carrier, who was at that time a citizen of Salem, wrote the sign "Cousins' Bee Hive, the busiest place in town," and under the trademark "Bee Hive" the store has since been known to everyone within twenty miles of Salem.

LAND SLIDE.

—From the verandah of the Waumbek Hotel, our present location, can be obtained the best view, in its entirety, of the recent land slide. This hotel is the highest of them all in altitude. With the naked eye the entire track of the slide can be seen from its starting point on Owl's head to the base of the mountain. With a glass, excursionists can be seen wending their way up and down viewing the ruins. Yesterday trains brought people from every direction, 2000 being a fair estimate. There is a well worn path up the Mountain suitable for ladies to take, but this does not satisfy the ordinary traveller. He must follow the track of the land slide, which is nearly a straight steep ascent. The slide followed the mountain stream to a great extent, covering at its foot an entire farm, and destroying the labor and toil of years.

The foot of the slide is but a short distance from Jefferson station. Enterprising landlords have circulated the report, which we saw before leaving home, that the nearest point of access is the Twin Mountain House and the Glen. It is a mistake. They are both on the other side of Cherry Mountain. The place to come is Jefferson. The tourist who wishes a good appetite can walk there from this hotel and back before breakfast. If there are ladies in the party it is just a pleasant drive. There are plenty of hotels in Jefferson, but none can surpass the Waumbek. There is plenty of room here and will be the rest of the month; next month we are informed the rooms are nearly all engaged. The situation is beautiful. The air is dry and so much so, that there is no dew on the grass, either morning or evening. It is on higher ground than Bethlehem and we see not why it should not rival the latter place in exemption from hay fever and kindred difficulties. The terms are reasonable, and the cuisine all that can be desired. Every want is anticipated. The table is supplied with every thing fresh from a farm connected with the hostelry. This year is the time to come to see the slide in all its beauty. To some extent it will be grown over next year. Come now, and to the Waumbek.

NUISANCE CASES.

Last Monday afternoon a large number of citizens met in the Selectmen's room, where the Board of Health gave a public hearing on complaint of several citizens in regard to a nuisance said to exist at Geo. Upton's Glue Works and at Dane & Marsh rendering works. Dr. C. G. Weston, for the board, stated that the complaint against the glue works had been made by Mr. Stephen Blaney, and that after witness had been summoned, the complaint had been withdrawn and he submitted the following letter to the board:

> To the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody.
> Gentlemen,—As I do not care to assume too much responsibility belonging to others, and for other reasons, I have decided to withdraw the complaint made to your board in regard to the smell connected with the glue factory for the present, and as I have made no other complaint or called for a hearing, I shall offer no defense.
> Respectfully yours,
> STEPHEN BLANEY.

Henry Wardwell, Esq., representing the Upton estate, said they were willing to comply with any regulation the board might make, and although this was an unusual way of proceeding without any direct charge, they were willing to abide by the decision of the board.

S. C. Bancroft, Esq., wanted to know if the board had received a paper with numerous names protesting against the glue works doing a certain kind of work. He was informed by Dr. Weston that they had not, although the Selectmen had. Chairman Southwick said it was not a matter for consideration at this time. Mr. Bancroft said that he had been retained in the case by Mr. Blaney, and had received no notice of a withdrawal of the complaint. Mr. Southwick said the Selectmen had nothing to do with the case and were only there by invitation of the Board of Health.

Mr. Bancroft then read the petition to the Selectmen, asking them to prevent Upton's folks from making use of such product known as "soup" and also the boiling of glue grounds. This was signed by Stephen Blaney and others. Mr. Bancroft said this was no general complaint, but seems to indicate that there was in the manufacture of soup an odor, and what he wished was, to make it clear whether he would be obliged to do the work as counsel in the case voluntarily or not, and after consultation with some of the signers of the paper, he decided to drop the case and take up Dane & Marsh. Here Mr. Wardwell wanted to know if his cliants were dismissed, but was informed by Mr. Bancroft that what he proposed to bring out was aimed at both places.

Chairman Southwick said if there was anyone to make complaint against the glue works they would be given a hearing.

Mr. Thomas Clothey thought their hair field on Washington street was a nuisance, and he made a complaint of it. He said he was a foreman for W. H. Brown, but had no instructions from him; knew the business had been interrupted by fire; had seen hair with bad smell hauled there within a week, and hair that hadn't been there three weeks stunk; was not biased in regard to this factory.

S. C. Bancroft said the beating of hair so near the street was a public nuisance, and he had always regarded it so; had heard people complain of the dust; there were 3000 or 4000 people passing there daily; the dust was forty times worse than street dust; the nuisance ought to be abated.

Dr. Geo. S. Osborne said he wanted to add his testimony. In passing there this morning he perceived a very unsavory odor coming from the factory; he had visited Lewis Allen when the smell had been perceptible in the house; had also noticed the beating of hair; the dust was exceedingly annoying and irritating, and is a nuisance that should be attended to by the Board. Dr. Osborne declined to be cross examined by Mr. Wardwell.

Mr. Upham, foreman of Upton's glue factory, was called and said they were obliged to take hair from the tanneries owing to existing contracts, but owing to the fire, for weeks they could not take care of it and it had been placed on the field, and the warm weather coming on some of it was hurt, but they had got this hair nearly all housed; they receive hair full of lime and milled hair which is dried at the Pepper farm; some of the hair on the field had been heated during the past few weeks. Wm. H. Brown wanted to know if they had not burned glue grounds, and Upham said they burned hard and soft coal and pressed tan; had tried to burn glue grounds several months ago; the smell from this factory is not as bad as most glue works; there are times when damaged stock is being put through that there might be an unpleasant smell. In regard to stuff carted between Upton's factory and Dane & Marsh's place, Mr. Upham said they were carting five or six loads a day of bone liquors which we evaporate and make into glue. In evaporating this bone soup there is no stench. Did not know what stench Mr. Blaney complained of; noticed none from teams in the street used to transport it, as it was hauled in tight casks and there is a very small leakage.

King Upton said they had used the hair field since the business started in 1860, and the amount of hair was about the same as five years ago. Mr. Perkins, on Franklin street, has double the drying field and has about as much hair. There had been no bad hair hauled on the field of late and the milled hair was sent to the farm. They did not like to have it heat as it took so much value out of it; costs $600 a year to keep the place clean. Mr. Blaney had said he would shut them up if it took the last dollar he had; Brown was a competitor and supposed he called himself a rival, had not carried hair from their field on account of its smell, but had taken some calf hair to wash.

Mr. W. H. Brown said he had no prejudice in the matter, but thought the smell very offensive and Mrs. Brown was made sick by it. The smoke from the chimney came down so, he was obliged to go in the house and shut the windows; had seen the horse car conductors hold their nose while passing the hair field. He had been told they burned glue grounds within a week; the smoke smelt disagreeable, it could be remedied by burning harder coal and the chimney could be extended so the smoke would thin out before reaching him; had no trouble until they began to make soup.

Mr. Wardwell said, if there was a well grounded complaint we would meet it, but any one who has such a feeling as Mr. Blaney has expressed, should not influence this Board to compel us to yield any rights we may have, on account of his prejudice. Who are the complainants? One, a man who makes mad threats, another a glue manufacturer and his foreman and still another, who would not allow himself to be cross examined. We admit this business cannot be carried on without a smell, neither can any leather business in this town. We are willing to do anything in reason and will be advised by the Board of Health. Mr. Bancroft closed the case by explaining the power of the Board.

DANE & MARSH CASE.

The nuisance case of Dane & Marsh was then taken, and Mr. Niles of Lynn appeared for the firm and Mr. Bancroft for the complainants. Mr. Bancroft read the following complaint:—

> To the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody.
> The undersigned residents of Peabody near the rendering works of Dane & Marsh, in said town, being unable to attend the hearing appointed for this afternoon, respectfully represent that said works are the source of very offensive odors and that they have been greatly annoyed by said odors, and they ask that the further prosecution of the rendering business at that place be forbidden by your Board as a public nuisance. Dated at Peabody, July 2, 1885.
> Samuel Brown, Joseph Brown, Ruth Brown, Elizabeth Marsh, Miss Emily N. Mansfield, Becca Pike, A. Taylor Brown, Mrs. John Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reed, Mrs. Hannah A. Brown, Lewis Allen, H. C. Allen.

Mr. Charles Holden was the first witness and said he resided on the corner of Lynnfield and County street; he frequently smelt the odor from the factory when the wind was north, also smelt the stuff conveyed in teams. Mr. Niles objected and said the teams which transported it belonged to Upton's works and not his cliants, and we have no power to control it. The counsel finely settled by admitting it was a nuisance but not controlled by Dane & Marsh. Mr. Holden resumed and said he had smelt the bad odor opposite the factory but not while loading on the teams.

Dr. Osborne had smelled it while riding along Lynn street last January for a distance of 200 feet or more. It smelt like decomposed animal, and he had noticed the same smell while passing the factory; it was disagreeable and so offensive as to be nauseating.

Rev. J. W. Colwell frequently passed the factory and smelt the odors which were very offensive and sickening, it was a smell similar to one he used to smell several years ago coming from a place where they tried out the entrails of dead hogs and other animals. He lived about a mile from the factory, but had smelled it so bad as to have to close his windows, and a week ago last Sunday, smelt it before leaving the pulpit. Had smelt it on Lynn and Forrest streets. Knew Marsh, but thought it was not the pastor's place to make complaints, and he was only here because he was summons. John Newhall living on Lynn street had been troubled and it smelt to him like bean water. Miss Mary Brown, daughter of Samuel Brown was often troubled in warm weather when the windows were open. It was a very sweet place where she lived till the rendering works were located there; knew nothing of offensive material being put on the land; had seen teams going to the factory with offensive matter in them.

Mrs. Chas. Holden, Eugene Reed, Warren Larrabee, W. H. Brown, David Putnam, Lewis Brown and Franklin Osborne related their experience which was in substance as given above. Mr. Brown said that a member of the board had said to him it was an offensive stink. Mr. Osborne said he recently visited at Mrs. Marsh's and was obliged to shorten his visit on account of the smell. Both counsel then took considerable time in arguing the case, and it was agreed Dane & Marsh, under the direction of the Board, should try and abate the nuisance, and the whole matter was left till such a time as the Board see fit to call another hearing, and at that time new evidence can be introduced. The hearing lasted till 7.20 o'clock.

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils for throat, and frequently by both channel.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individual at different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of a notable size, on which traces of blood may at times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant sniffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertions. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical or mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, loss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lighthill to decide on the first examination as to the cureability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of and [illegible] of the Nervous system from whatever cause.

After doing justice to the meal, they strolled about the grounds watching the beautiful sunset from the rocks, and could but feel:

At a seasonable hour the company started for home, having spent a most delightful and pleasant afternoon.

Æsthetic Boston has a beer garden in its famous Music Hall. If all the towns in the vicinity gave it the same patronage it is receiving from Peabody there would be no question of its success financially.

This is the season of the year in which the grocery man cheerily displayeth many fruit jars, and the fond mamma filleth them with jam for the small boy and big man, in the coming winter months.

Chas. A. Ropes & Son, Salem, has a large assortment of flour of all brands, which they are enabled to offer at unusually low figures. Give them a trial. Goods delivered in Peabody free of charge.

A visit at this time of the year to the store of John P. Peabody is of great advantage to the housewife, who is on the lookout for bargains. Just now he is offering bargains in every department. We advise all of our lady readers to visit Mr. Peabody's store and look at his goods and prices.

Mr. A. B. Cross, 256 1-2 Essex St., Salem, exhibits portraits large and small, and where the photographic art is embellished with painting, it is done with a skilful hand. Mr. Cross offers inducements to clubs and warrants his photographs to be of the best materials.

A store keeper on one of our principal streets has a concrete walk, on which some artist chalks his advertising. When, as we noticed the other day, the word "watermelons" and then following it the words "Jamacia Ginger" it was quite suggestive, to say the least.

The next reunion of the Emery family will take place in Melonean Hall, Tremont street, Boston, Thursday, Sept. 10. This will be the 250th anniversary of the coming of John and Anthony Emery to this country. There will be an opening address by the president, Rev. Rufus Emery of Newburg, N.Y.; an oration by George F. Emery, of Portland, Me., and poems are expected from one or two members of the family.

Mr. Geo. H. Jacobs was the first to display any mourning for the dead hero. One of his show windows contains a broken shaft of white, with black drapery and the letters U. S. G. upon it. Reclining against the shaft is a finely framed picture of General Grant. At the base of the shaft are arranged black and white plaits, while a large American flag furnishes an appropriate background. The window attracts a deal of attention.

In C. E. Teague's window is a profusion of flags surrounding a picture of Gen. Grant, which is draped in black, while at the base are black and white plaits.

Mr. F. D. Tarlton has his window prettily trimmed with black goods, which surround a picture of General Grant. The bottom of the window is arranged with black and white goods.

Mr. W. R. Austin has a picture of Grant in the window of his restaurant beneath an arch of flags, while above the picture is a beautiful white dove.

Mr. W. F. Sawyer has draped both his windows. In one is a picture of Gen. Grant surrounded with black and white draperies and with the American flag for a back ground. In the other is a picture of the General with a tent made of white cloth surrounded by flags.

A Lesson to Lovers.

She, with a milk pail on her arm,
Turns aside with her young cheeks glowing,
And sees down the lane the slow dull tread
Of the drove of cows that are homeward going.
"Bessie," he said; at the sound she turned,
Her blue eyes full of childish wonder;
My mother is feeble, and lame and old—
I need a wife at my farmhouse yonder.

My heart is lonely, my home is drear,
I need your presence ever near me;
Will you be my guardian angel, dear,
Queen of my household to guide and cheer me?"

"It has a pleasnt sound," she said,
A "household queen, a guiding spirit,
To warm your heart and cheer your home,
And keep the sunshine ever near it.
But I am only a simple child,
So my mother says in her daily chiding,
And what must a guardian angel do
When she first begins her work of guiding?

"Well, first, my dear Bessie, a smiling face
Is dearer far than the rarest beauty,
And my mother, fretful, lame and old,
Will require a daughter's loving duty.
You will see to her flannels, drops and tea,
And talk with her of lungs and liver;
Give her your cheerful service, dear;
'The Lord He loveth a cheerful giver.'

You will see that my breakfast is piping hot,
And rub the clothes to a snowy whiteness,
Make golden butter and snowy rolls
And polish things to a shining brightness;
Will darn my stockings and mend my coats,
And see that the buttons are sewed on tightly;
You will keep things cheerful and neat and sweet,
That home's altar fires may burn more brightly.

You will read to me at evening the daily news,
The tedious Winter nights beguiling;
And never forget that the sweetest face
Is a cheerful face that is always smiling.
In short, you'll arrange in a general way
For a sort of sublunary heaven;
For home, dear Bessie, say what we may.
Is the highest sphere to a woman given.",

The lark sang out to the bending sky,
The bobolink piped in the nodding rushes,
And out of the tossing clover blooms
Came the sweet, clear song of the meadow thrushes,
And Bessie, listening, paused awhile,
Then said, with a sly glance at her neighbor,
'But John—do you mean—that is to say,
What shall I get for this labor?

"To be nurse, companion, and servant girl
To make a home's altar fires burn brightly;
To wash and iron and scrub and cook,
And always be cheerful, neat and sprightly;
To give up liberty, home and friends;
Nay, even the name of a mother's giving;
To do all this for one's board and clothes;
Why, the life of an angel isn't worth living."

And Bessie gayly went her way
Down through the fields of scented clover,
But never since that Summer day
Has she won a glance from her rustic lover.
The lark sings out to the bending sky,
The clouds sail on as white as ever;
The clovers toss in the Summer wind,
But Bessie has lost her chance forever.

Higher, higher
Up the blue vault climbing;
Trilling, trilling,
Wings and voice keep timing,
Essence of melodious notes distilling.

Higher, higher
Sunlit pinions glisten,
Fleck the azure,
Twinkling while we listen
To thy thrills of high ecstating pleasure.

Higher, higher
Light glad heart, wing-driven,
Leaping, going
Far up into heaven,
There exult in radiant ether flowing.

Higher, higher,
Immaterial there,
To our viewing
Lost in luminous air.
Only song, the listening ear pursuing.

Higher, higher,
Spring, my heart uprising,
Winged by prayer,
Leaving sad surmising,
Sing thy morning song in upper air.

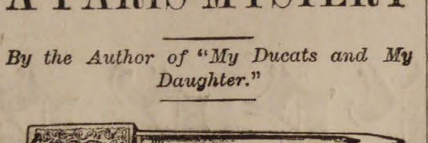
A PARIS MYSTERY

By the Author of "My Ducats and My Daughter."



CHAPTER I.

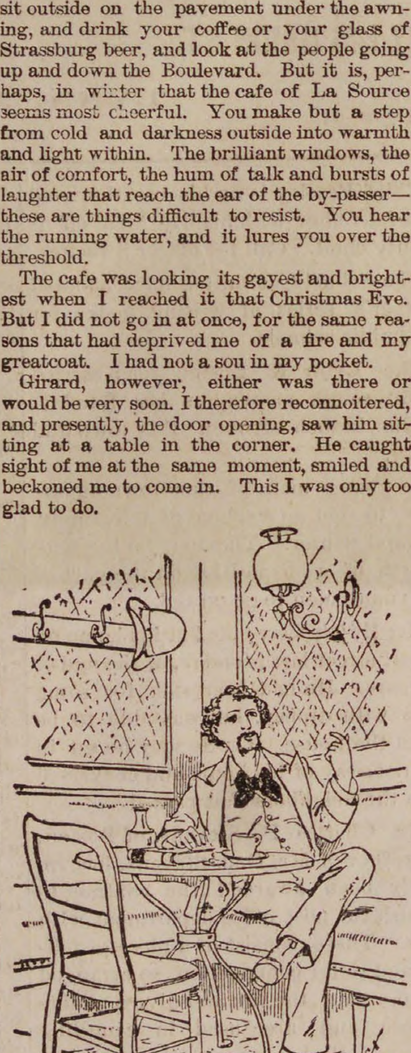
I am asked to set down, in order and detail, all that I know relative to the affair of the Passage de Mazarin, or, as it was commonly called at the time, the "Crime of Christmas Day." This I can do very easily, since not only are the facts fresh in my memory, but I have also before me, as I write, the various documents, newspaper extracts, etc., bearing on the case.

I begin by telling how, on the evening of Monday, the 24th of December, 186—, about 8:30 o'clock, I left Girard's lodgings in the Rue Dauphine, where I was then staying, and went to meet him by appointment at the cafe called La Source. The night was very cold, and I had been sitting without a fire, for reasons; consequently I was not sorry when the hour came for my leaving the dismal, sky-high garret which was my temporary home. In spite of the cold, I did not take my greatcoat with me, also for reasons; and I well remember how keen the wind blew, as I hurried shivering up the Boulevard St. Michel. It was a wretched Christmas eve. Snow had begun to fall, but melted as soon as it reached the pavements, covering them with a slush that made the asphalt very treacherous footing. No scene could have been more cheerless than the Boulevard that night; the dark sky above, the dripping pavement beneath, the leafless trees, the falling snow—I shiver yet to think of it. And no greatcoat!

All the world—at least, all the world of the Latin Quarter—knows the Cafe de la Source. It is one of the features of the Boulevard St. Michel; and the Boulevard—Boule Miche, we used to call it affectionately in our student days—is one of the features of the Quarter. The cafe takes its name of "the Fountain" from a grotto fronting the entrance, with running water and little cascades that make a pleasant, bubbling, tinkling noise, not altogether drowned by the rattling of dominoes, the babble of tongues, and the shouts of waiters. It is very agreeable, in summer, to sit outside on the pavement under the awning, and drink your coffee or your glass of Strassburg beer, and look at the people going up and down the Boulevard. But it is, perhaps, in winter that the cafe of La Source seems most cheerful. You make but a step from cold and darkness outside into warmth and light within. The brilliant windows, the air of comfort, the hum of talk and bursts of laughter that reach the ear of the by-passer—these are things difficult to resist. You hear the running water, and it lures you over the threshold.

The cafe was looking its gayest and brightest when I reached it that Christmas Eve. But I did not go in at once, for the same reasons that had deprived me of a fire and my greatcoat. I had not a sou in my pocket.

Girard, however, either was there or would be very soon. I therefore reconnoitered, and presently, the door opening, saw him sitting at a table in the corner. He caught sight of me at the same moment, smiled and beckoned me to come in. This I was only too glad to do.



He beckoned me to come in.

He had on the table before him a cup of coffee and a big book; the coffee untouched, the book unopened.

"My dear Paul," he said, "you see I have waited for you. It is warmer here than at the Rue Dauphine, eh?—waiter, another cup of coffee and a glass of absinthe."

"Your room, Raoul," I said, "reminded me to-night of Spitzbergen. I have not been there, but I have been in your room and I know that I do not exaggerate. I think Barentz would have found your room cold."

"You languish for the Rue de Medicis?—for your mirrors and damask curtains and the porcelain stove?"

"I confess it. But I am not ungrateful to the Rue Dauphine. It is at least a roof!"

"And we may enjoy the luxury of a fagot—by-and-by."

"Ah! I see you have got the book?"

Raoul gave a kind of groan as he pushed the volume toward me. "Look at that!" he said.

I looked at it. It was a bulky volume, in English, called "The Buddhist Belief;" the work of some English savant, whose name I could not pronounce then, and have forgotten now. I opened it carelessly here and there, then looked at the number on the last page.

"This is frightful!" I said, "450 pages, and the type is small! How much time, Raoul?"

"Six weeks, counting from to-day."

"And how much money?"

"Two hundred francs."

"That is shameful, it is criminal! Two hundred francs for translating a book of this size!—it is unheard of! Anything paid in advance?"

"Nothing. That's the worst feature of the case. M. Beauvais did not offer, and I could not bring myself to ask. I dare say, when he looked at my coat, he thought he risked enough in letting me carry the book away."

"Who is M. Beauvais?"

"A member of the Institute, very rich, apparently. He lives in the Rue d'Anjou, Faubourg St. Honore. He knows all the eastern languages, but does not read English. So much the better for us. You must take your share of the translation, Paul; then we shall do it in half the time."

"With all my heart. But how are we to live meanwhile? Can we exist for three weeks without food—granting we can do it without fire? I have not a sou in the world; my wardrobe, my bijouterie, my books—even my law-books—are all at the pawnbroker's, and my allowance is not due for eight weeks, I believe. You might as well try to bleed a stone as to extract money from my worthy parent before the precise day and hour; and borrowing becomes more arduous every day. That is my position. And yours?"

"The same exactly, my dear Paul, except that I have these two francs fifty centimes which you see, and that no allowance comes to me at the end of eight weeks!"

"Two francs fifty centimes! That will not tide us over the three weeks until this terrible translation is finished. And how are we to buy paper, pens and ink?"

Raoul did not speak for some moments; he had suddenly grown thoughtful and serious. We had been talking in a half-jesting tone, but when next he spoke his voice was grave.

"It's not the prospect of a little more cold and hunger I am thinking of," he said at last; "no doubt we shall contrive to dine at least every second day, and we can lie in bed a good deal, as we have done before. But to-morrow, my friend, is Christmas, and this day week is New Year's day."

"Well?"

"Well?—don't you see what that means! On New Year' day we give gifts to those we love——"

"Ah!—Gabrielle! I did not think of that!"

"My dear Paul, you never think! That is why I love you. But just see how I am placed! You know that, if she chose—if she took back her word to me—Gabrielle might have presents—dresses—jewels—what you will! And I—I shall walk with her round the Boulevards; the windows are full of pretty things; she will scarcely look at them, for fear of vexing me; and I shall not be able to turn my eyes from them, for thinking of what I should like to buy for her. I shall see the people crowding in and out, laughing, joking, happy in giving and receiving—and for Gabrielle, nothing! Even the booths on the edge of the pavement we must pass—even the most trifling keepsake, I cannot give it her! That is what happens on New Year's day to the poor man who has a sweetheart."

"If I had only something left to send to the pawnbroker!"

The exclamation escaped me unawares, I was so moved by Raoul's evident pain of mind. It made him laugh, however; he declared that was my instinctive resource. And, indeed, there was some truth in this, I confess it.

"Let us look things in the face," I said at last; "surely there must be some resource, if we can only think of it. I shall go to Levi Jacob to-morrow; I shall demand a loan; I shall tell him——"

"That your friend Raoul Girard wants to buy a present for his affianced on New Year's day? That won't soften the flint that does duty for a heart with Levi Jacob, my dear Paul! And besides you owe him too much already."

"Too true. And can you, then, think of nothing?"

"Nothing. You know that since Le Petit Monde stopped no other journal has accepted my articles. And my wretched salary as critic for Le Drame is already overdrawn; they will advance me nothing. I had some hope when the editor of The Monde gave me that letter to M. Beauvais. I thought he might have paid us something in advance. But that hope has failed."

For some time we both sipped our coffee in silence. I had never before seen Raoul thus in open rebellion against his poverty; I had never before seen that shadow on his brow which darkened it to-night.

"Our only hope now," I said at last, gloomily, "seems to be in a miracle."

"Say at once—in a letter from the director of the Odeon!"

"And why not? Only I would not call that a miracle! You know what I said of your comedy at the time, Raoul—you know what Tisson, of Le Drame, said of it——"

"I know, my dear Paul, that if you were director of the Odeon the rehearsals would begin to-morrow. But evidently M. Desnouette's opinion is not ours. I wish he would send back the manuscript; I could make a short story of it."

Raoul spoke lightly, but I knew that this particular failure had bitterly disappointed him. Six months' hard work had been given to that comedy. There were scenes and situations in it that—but this is a quite needless digression.

"Have I not heard you speak of a relative of yours living in the Quarter?" I ventured to say; "an uncle, was it not, who is rich? Perhaps he——"

"Useless to think of it! He is rich—how rich nobody knows but himself. But he is a miser; he grudges himself every mouthful he eats and every fagot he burns. He must believe that there are pockets in the winding-sheet! You remember that day in the gardens of the Luxembourg last summer?"

"Quite well. We were sitting under the trees, feeding the birds with the crumbs left over from our breakfast. An old man hobbled past and frowned at us. What was it he said to you, Raoul?"

"'Young man,' he said, 'never give away what some day you may want yourself.' And that is the man! I never yet have asked anything of him for myself. Twice I went to him, when my good uncle at Provins—his own brother—was lying ill and in want. Rather than give me money—rather than part with his cherished coin, he actually gave me one or two things he had about him, articles of vertu—to sell!"

"I remember. What a singular man!"

"He is a cur; I can call him nothing else! When my poor uncle at Provins died I went to him again. It was about the costs of the funeral. 'Pay for all,' he said; 'then bring an exact account to me.' I paid for all; partly with what I could scrape together, partly by a loan from you. When I went back I found that my worthy uncle had given strict orders to the servant never on any showing to admit me again. That was a year ago, and he owes me the money to this day. It would make me rich now—if I could get it!"

"And you have not seen him since?"

"I have not tried. My interviews with him were not pleasant. He affected to believe that my story was a fiction; that I only wanted his money to spend it on my follies! He made me swallow adders! Pah! Say no more of him. He is the one man on earth that I hate!"

Raoul said this in a tone which left no doubt as to the reality of his hatred. I noticed how his face flushed and his eyes blazed, and could imagine how badly the old miser must have treated him, since Raoul's anger was the rarest thing in the world.

Nothing more passed between us on this disagreeable subject; but I could see that Raoul had not dismissed it from his mind. He was silent and preoccupied, and the shadow rested on his face. I knew that he was thinking also of Gabrielle Dumaine, and how he could offer her no gift on New Year's day. That might seem a small thing, comparatively; but it was not so to Raoul Girard. For he was very proud.

We left the cafe of La Source unwillingly; the plash and ripple of the fountain seemed to murmur: Stay; call for another glass of absinthe, another cup of coffee. But two francs!—forty sous!—and an indefinite number of dinners to expend them on! We tore ourselves away from La Source.

Arm in arm we went along the Rue Racine and across the Place de l'Odeon, on the way to our common lodging. Raoul was strangely silent, and I noticed that he walked at a much swifter pace than was usual with him.

Neither of us had overcoat or umbrella; these useful articles had drifted long since to the pawnbroker shop. The sleet lashed in our faces, our thin garments were soon drenched, the mud and water from the puddles splashed up about us. It was an execrable night. It should have been my part to solace myself with a little mild grumbling, and Raoul's to rebuke me with some words of gay philosophy. But to-night I had an impression that he was making a personal grievance of this exposure to the snow and wind. He seemed strangely unlike himself. Once, after one of the fiercer blasts, I heard something like a curse escape his lips.

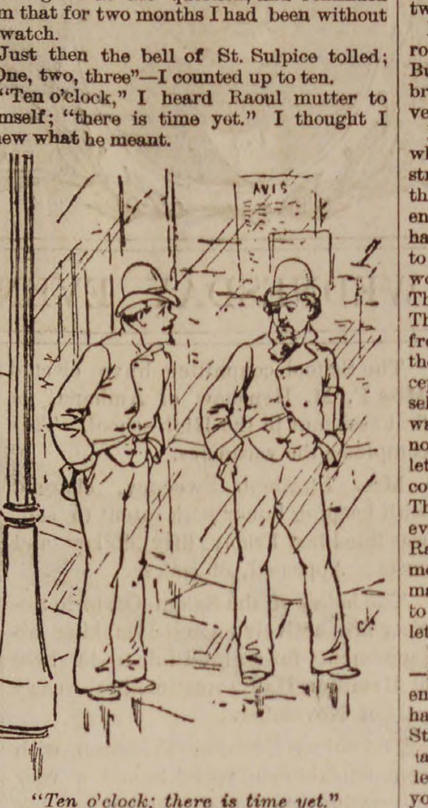
We scarcely exchanged a dozen words between the Boulevard and the top of the Rue Dauphine. At the corner of that street Raoul stopped abruptly. It was as if he had brought some long meditation to a close.

"What o'clock is it, Paul?" he asked me.

I laughed at the question, and reminded him that for two months I had been without a watch.

Just then the bell of St. Sulpice tolled; "One, two, three"—I counted up to ten.

"Ten o'clock," I heard Raoul mutter to himself; "there is time yet." I thought I knew what he meant.



"Ten o'clock; there is time yet."

"My friend," he said, "I am going to pay a visit. Oblige me by carrying home this book, and leave our door unlocked. I shall not be late, but do not wait for me if you feel at all sleepy. In the meantime, good night!"

It did not surprise me that Raoul should mean to pay a visit at that hour. I thought I knew where he was going.

We parted at the corner of the street. Raoul, still walking very fast, went back on the way we had come. As for me, I went shivering homeward, carrying with me the English book. On the way I bought two fagots for use on the morrow, when we should begin the work of translation. And I wished very much that the texture of Raoul's coat had produced a different effect on the mind of that wealthy member of the Institute.

CHAPTER II.

When I awoke next morning it was to wonder what could be the hour of day. I felt as if I had slept sufficiently, and yet the light in the room seemed strangely dim. It might have been early morning.

I looked across the room to the corner in which stood Raoul's truckle-bed, opposite my own. Raoul still slept, and soundly, to judge from his deep, regular breathing. I knew that he must have been late the night before; I had fallen asleep before he returned.

Presently I heard the heavy foot of Pierre, our landlord and servant in one, mounting the stair, and then his knock at the door.

"Is that you, Pierre?"

"It is I, with a letter for Monsieur, and one also for M. Girard."

I was about to rise to admit him, when I noticed that the key was not in the lock of the door. Evidently Raoul had not secured the door behind him last night, as it was his habit to do.

"Enter, then; the key is on your side, is it not?"

"Ah, it is true!" Next minute he had entered the room, and coming to my bedside, handed me the two letters.

"What o'clock is it, Pierre?"

"It is half-past eleven, Monsieur."

"How! Half-past eleven? Why, it is a veritable twilight in this room!"

"If Monsieur looks at the window he will see the reason of that."

I looked at the window in the ceiling of our attic room, and saw that it was covered with snow.

"What frightful weather! You will find two faggots in the closet, Pierre; have the goodness to light a fire, and hang these clothes before it. And make as little noise as possible, if you please. M. Girard still sleeps."

"M. Girard was very late last night," remarked Pierre; "it was after two when I let him in."

"So late as that?" I said, surprised. Raoul could not then have gone to visit Mme. Dumaine and Gabrielle; he never stayed there after 11 at latest. Where had he been?

While Pierre was making up the fire, I read the letter he had brought me. It was from my father, in answer to an appeal for money—a desperate appeal, and useless, as I had expected. Unlike myself, my father was a man of principle; and one of his principles—the one I found personally most inconvenient—was this: Not a sou till quarter-day. He made me a good allowance, which, in those days of wild and thoughtless youth, I was accustomed to spend with rapidity. Raoul was always poor; I was, at intervals, rich for a few days; then plunged into frightful poverty, owing to my parent's stern resolve never to antedate supplies. I had also numerous creditors, and had become proficient in the art of "doubling a cape"—that is, slipping round a street corner when one of these appeared. It was my custom, when the funds began to sink, to leave my comparatively luxurious room in the Rue de Medicis, with their pleasant view over the Luxembourg gardens, and install myself in Raoul's garret, amid the din and squalor of the Rue Dauphine. His companionship more than made up for the discomfort, the cold and the occasional pinch of hunger. We were fast friends, financed in common and had no secrets from each other. Raoul was very different from me—frugal, industrious, indulging in few pleasures, but always frank and gay, however empty his pockets. We were both students of law and our final examination was now not far off. I had never regretted my improvidence until now. But when I saw how a little ready money would have enabled Raoul and myself to leave aside all other work and give ourselves to our law books, I did regret it. And therefore, some days ago, I had written that letter to my father, scarcely expecting any more favorable answer than the exceedingly curt and decided one I received.

Pierre had by this time kindled the fire, and was arranging before it, on the backs of the two chairs our attic boasted, Raoul's damp clothes and mine. All at once he uttered an exclamation of surprise, which startled me from my study of the parental letter. "How! look then at the coat of M. Girard! The sleeve is ripped up right to the shoulder!"

"What! the sleeve ripped up, do you say?"

"Torn completely, Monsieur! But what is to be done? Monsieur has but one coat at present, and until it is repaired——"

"He cannot leave this room, of course. It is very awkward. How can he have done it?"

"If Monsieur desires, I will take the coat downstairs to Nannette, who will sew it sufficiently well. Monsieur doubtless remembers what the little tailor at the corner says—that he will do absolutely nothing more for Monsieur until his bill is paid?"

"It is true, Pierre; I recollect the words of the little wretch. By all means, take the coat to Madame, and give her my thanks in advance."

Pierre departed, taking the coat with him. I began turning over the pages of the English book, reading a passage here and there, and trying to reckon the time it would take us to translate it. Raoul was an excellent English scholar; I could read that language fairly. We had done this kind of work once or twice before.

Every now and then I looked across the room to see whether Raoul was not awake. But he did not stir. The heavy, regular breathing continued; he seemed to be sleeping very soundly.

By chance my eye fell on Raoul's letter, which I had laid on the table beside me. I stretched forth my hand, took it and looked at the address; letters in those days were enough of a rarity to make one curious. The handwriting was strange to me. I was about to lay the letter down, when I noticed these words on the front of the envelope, "Odeon Theatre." Imagine my wonder, my delight! There was but one conclusion to be drawn from a letter which came unaccompanied by the manuscript. Raoul's comedy was accepted! For weeks past I had been telling myself, I had been assuring Raoul, that nothing was more certain to happen than this. But now, when it had actually happened—for the letter seemed sufficient evidence of that—I could scarcely realize at first that it was true. The comedy accepted!—that would change everything! No more living in a garret for Raoul—no more dining at eight sous—no more translating dry English books—and as many presents on New Year's day as he cared to buy! In a moment I was out of bed, the letter in my hand.

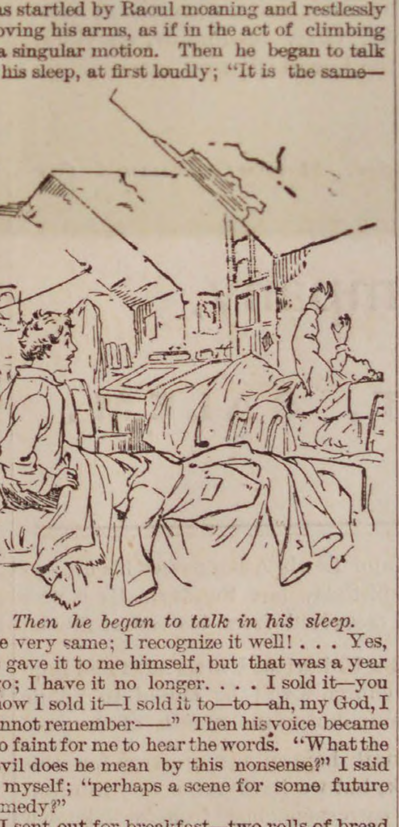
"Raoul!" There was no answer. "Raoul!"—in a louder voice. Still no answer. "Heavens! how he sleeps! Raoul!"—laying my hand on his shoulder and gently shaking him. Still neither speech nor motion. "He must have been very late last night. Where the devil can he have gone? Raoul, waken, won't you? Here is a letter from——"

Just then I caught sight of his face in the feeble light of the snow-obscured window. Its appearance alarmed me—almost gave me a shock. It was fever-flushed, and tinged with purple under the eyes; the lips were tense; at the corners of the mouth something like foam had gathered. The breathing was slow, deep-drawn; this did not seem to me a natural slumber. I shook him more violently; still he did not awake.

I went across the room, and looked into a drawer of the writing-table, where I knew Raoul kept a vial containing a solution of morphia. He had been troubled at one time by insomnia, resulting from overwork, and the doctor had given him this as a sleeping-draught. I found the vial; it was empty.

This at first frightened me terribly, until I remembered that there could not have been much more than one dose left in the bottle—certainly not enough to be dangerous. Still, Raoul's feverish look made me uneasy. I resolved on giving him a little time longer to awake, and meanwhile went to bed again. My clothes were still far from dry, and the cold was Siberian.

I had not lain in bed ten minutes before I was startled by Raoul moaning and restlessly moving his arms, as if in the act of climbing—a singular motion. Then he began to talk in his sleep, at first loudly; "It is the same—the very same; I recognize it well! . . . Yes, he gave it to me himself, but that was a year ago; I have it no longer. . . . I sold it—you know I sold it—I sold it to—to—ah, my God, I cannot remember——" Then his voice became too faint for me to hear the words. "What the devil does he mean by this nonsense?" I said to myself; "perhaps a scene for some future comedy?"



Then he began to talk in his sleep.

I sent out for breakfast—two rolls of bread and a half-bottle of Macon—and remained all the afternoon beside Raoul, watching. About 4 o'clock he began to stir uneasily, then opened his eyes and, seeing me seated by his bedside, stretched out his hand and smiled. I felt inexpressibly relieved.

"What is wrong with you, my dear Raoul?" I said; "are you unwell?"

"No, No! Only I have had a bad dream—the worst dream I ever had!" He passed his hand over his eyes. "But I am awake now, thank God! Have I slept long, Paul?"

"An eternity! I thought you would never waken! Do you know, Raoul, you have finished the morphia that was in the vial?"

"Finished it? I don't seem to remember. Tell me, was I late last night?"

"Pierre says you did not return until after two. I was asleep when you came in."

Raoul started and looked at me strangely.

"How cold it is in this room!" he said; "see how I shiver!" And indeed the hand which he stretched out to me was trembling; when I touched it, however, I found it quite hot.

"You are feverish, my dear fellow," I said to him. "This comes of infrequent dining. Now, this is what I shall do. I shall spend our two remaining francs on something resembling a dinner—oh, yes! I have had breakfast; I shan't want to dine till to-morrow, or the day after! By that time, no doubt, I shall have captured somehow that shyest of all creatures, the five-franc piece. There must be some one still from whom I can borrow."

In spite of Raoul's protests, I had some food and a half-bottle of wine brought from the restaurant over the way. He felt better after this; the headache of which he had complained left him; and he soon began to laugh and talk in his usual manner. But he still complained of feeling weak, and I persuaded him to remain all day in bed.

"Let us begin at the English book, however," he said; "for us time is money, as the English say."

"No, no! We need not begin at that, Raoul! You may say good-by to your translating. The days of your bondage are over—you will never translate again!"

"What in Heaven's name do you mean?"

"Open and read!" I cried, giving him the letter. "Here is money, fame—everything! And it has not come a day too soon."

Raoul took the letter; when he saw the words "Odeon Theatre," his face became a shade paler, but his hand was wonderfully steady.

"You are rushing to conclusions, Paul," he said; "this letter is evidently from the administration of the Odeon, but it may not——"

"It can mean only one thing—that the comedy is accepted! Open it at once, for Heaven's sake! Let us know the best or the worst—though, of course, it is the best. I am sure of it."

A Great Victory

A Terrible Case of Scrofula Cured by

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"In the winter of 1879 I was attacked with Scrofula in one of the most aggravating forms. At one time I had no less than thirteen large abscesses over and around my neck and throat, continually exuding an offensive mass of bloody matter disgusting to behold, and almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible to fully describe my sufferings, as the case was complicated with Chronic Catarrh. After three years of misery, having been treated by three physicians, I was worse than ever. Finally, on the recommendation of W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. And now, after having taken twelve bottles, within the last twelve months, the scrofulous eruptions have entirely ceased, and the abscesses have all disappeared, except the unsightly scars, which are daily becoming 'smaller by degrees, and beautifully less.' I do not know what it may have done for others, but I do know that in my case, Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved an effective specific indeed. As an evidence of my gratitude I send these facts unsolicited, and I am ready to verify the authenticity of this cure, by personal correspondence with any one who doubts it." CHARLES A. ROBERTS, East Wilson, N. Y.

This statement is confirmed by W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, N. Y., who calls the cure a great victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Send for book giving statements of many cures.

GENERAL GRANT.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE HERO'S NOBLE CAREER.

Ulysses S. Grant was born at Point Pleasant, O., April 27, 1822. His name was Hiram Ulysses, but his appointment to West Point in 1839 was blunderingly made out for Ulysses S., and so it had to remain. He graduated in 1843, served in the Mexican war and was brevetted captain for his conduct at Chapultepec. In 1861 he became colonel of the 21st regiment of Illinois volunteers and was soon promoted to brigadier-general of volunteers. On the 16th of February, 1862, he captured Fort Donelson. In answer to Gen. Buckner's proposal that commissioners be appointed to arrange the terms of capitulation, Grant wrote the memorable reply: "No terms other than an unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately upon your works." After this victory Grant was immediately commissioned major-general of volunteers. April 6, a large part of his force was surprised by the confederates under Gen. A. S. Johnston at Pittsburg landing, and routed; but Grant arrived on the field and re-forming the lines, defeated the enemy, who withdrew to Corinth. Grant next became commander of the department of East Tennessee. Oct. 16, his department was extended as far as Vicksburg. His movements against this stronghold ended in Pemberton's surrender with 27,000 prisoners. July 4, 1863, Grant was thereupon promoted to rank of major-general in the regular army. Nov. 24 and 25 Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain were carried by assault, and for this congress awarded him a gold medal and returned thanks to his army. He became lieutenant-general Mar. 17, 1864, and made his headquarters with the army of the Potomac in the field. With nearly 700,000 men under arms he planned two campaigns, one under his own direction with the army commanded by Gen. Meade against Lee at Richmond, and the other under Gen. Sherman against Johnston at Atlanta. Grant began the movement on Richmond, May 3, with 140,000 men. Then followed the great battles before Richmond, and it was after one of the most bloody of these, Spottsylvania, that Grant sent his famous dispatch to the government, closing with: "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." Grant now began the siege of Petersburg, which ended after the victory at Five Forks in April, 1865, when Richmond was evacuated, and Lee retreated, followed by Grant, who forced his surrender at Appomattox Court house, April 2. After the war he was commissioned Lieut. General of the United States army, a rank especially created for him. During the suspension of secretary Stanton, Grant was secretary of war ad interim from August 12, 1867, to January 14, 1868. At the republican national convention at Chicago, May 21, 1868, he was nominated for president with Schuyler Colfax for vice president. They carried 26 states and received 214 electoral votes against 80 for Seymour and Blair. Grant was inaugurated March 4, 1869, and as he was in harmony with a majority of congress, the work of reconstruction of the rebellious states, which had been delayed under Johnson, went on. In 1871, president Grant unsuccessfully urged the annexation of Santo Domingo as a territory of the United States. At the national republican convention held in Philadelphia, June 6, 1872, president Grant was renominated and Henry Wilson was nominated for vice-president. They received 268 electoral votes against 80 for other candidates. Grant's popular majority over Greeley was 762,991. Soon after the expiration of his presidential term, General Grant made a voyage around the world and was everywhere received with the highest consideration. He was also the recipient of hundreds of curious and costly gifts from admiring sovereigns, princes and others, the world over. Since his trip around the world, he has made his home in New York city. In May, 1884, through the failure of the Marine Bank, General Grant lost his entire property, except, of course, a fund of $250,000 raised for him by friends several years previously and held in trust. Nearly a year ago General Grant's health began to fail and his death since that time has been expected almost daily. Such briefly has been the life of America's greatest general, who has made one of the most enduring pages in the illustrious history of the country.

THE FAMOUS NOTRE DAME.—On the 30th of last January, the Sisters of the most noted Catholic ladies seminary in the United States, the famous Notre Dame, at Govanstown, near Baltimore, Md., made public a card, certifying to the beneficial results attending the use of Red Star Cough Cure in that institution. They state that they found it efficacious alike for relieving coughs, oppressions on the chest and irritation of the throat. Officials of the Board of Health of Brooklyn, Baltimore and other cities have likewise publicly proclaimed the virtues of this new discovery, which is entirely free from opiates, poisons and other objections.

OUR FISHERIES.—The treaty of Washington, negotiated in 1873, expires by limitation, on July 1, and our fishermen in Canadian waters will then be under the provisions of the treaty of 1818, which expressly forbids United States fishing vessels from entering Canadian ports except only for shelter, and it will prove intolerable to them. Canada is extremely jealous of the Yankee fishermen, and the Dominion Parliament has declared in favor of the imposition of a duty upon all fish and fishery products imported into that country after the expiration of the treaty, without regard to the prospective negotiations for a continuance of the provisions of the Washington treaty. In May, Sir Ambrose Shea, a leading business man of Newfoundland, had a conference with Sec. Bayard, concerning the matter, and an attempt was made to have a tacit agreement to observe the conditions of the treaty of 1873 until the meeting of Congress next December. The action of the Canadian Government, however, shows that this will not be done, but that a policy of hostility to United States fishermen will be inaugurated at once. Formerly Canada exported fish to this country, but now we send them to our Canuck neighbors; hence the antagonism. Loud and long complaints may be expected almost immediately from our fishermen, who demand the same rights in Canadian ports that Dominion fishermen receive in United States ports. A treaty founded upon principles of broad reciprocity is a necessity, and it ought to be negotiated at as early a date as possible. The United States fisheries employ nearly $38,000,000 capital and more than 131,000 persons in making ready for market an annual product worth more than $43,000,000, and the proper protection of this vast industry presents a very important problem to the authorities in Washington. It is to be hoped that the scramble for office may be suspended long enough to attend to so vital a question as the expiration of this treaty presents.—Toledo Blade.

100 DOSES ONE DOLLAR—Is inseparably connected with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and is true of no other medicine. It is an unanswerable argument as to strength and economy, while thousands testify to its superior blood-purifying and strengthening qualities. A bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla contains 100 doses and will last a month, while others will average to last not over a week. Hence, for economy, buy Hood's Sarsaparilla. (B)

Our school teachers are getting away on their vacations. There is none where they go that can distance them for good looks.

TIRED AND LANGUID WOMEN.—How many women there are of whom these words are true: "They feel languid and tired, hardly able to bear their weight on their feet, the bloom all gone from their cheeks, irritable and cross without meaning to be, nerves all upset, worried with the children, fretted over little things, a burden to themselves, and yet with no acute disease." What a pity it is. But a few bottles of Parker's Tonic will drive all this away, and relieve the troubles peculiar to their sex.

"I understand you have joined the Salvation Army, General," said somebody to the Great American Traveller a few days ago. And Daniel indignantly replied: "Did, eh? What do you take me for,—a crank?"

WHAT WILL SURELY DO IT.—One's hair begins to fall out from many causes. The important question is: What is sure to make it grow in again? According to the testimony of thousands, Parker's Hair Balsam will do it. It quickly covers bald spots, restores the original color when the hair is gray or faded, eradicates dandruff, and causes the scalp to feel cool and well. It is not a dye, not greasy, highly perfumed, safe. Never disappoints those who require a nice, reliable dressing.

Talk is cheap and in some quarters very cheap, as some of our store keepers are finding out.

"MOTHERS SHOULD NOTE THIS." Under this caption an old physician writes to a Cincinnati Medical Journal, that in view of the fact that people living at a distance from cities are frequently obliged to resort to cough mixtures already put up for use, they should provide themselves with only such remedies as are known to be free from opiates, poisons and narcotics; thus avoiding not only danger, but even fatal results. He recommends the recently discovered Red Star Cough Cure which analyses and tests by various Boards of Health proved to be purely vegetable as well as prompt, effective and entirely harmless.

It has been truly said that barbers are great hands for scraping acquaintances.

George Campbell, Hopkinsville, Ky., says: "Burdock Blood Bitters is the best preparation for the Blood and Stomach ever manufactured.

The six dollar a week clerk is now passing himself off for the son of a millionaire at the country hotel where his cash will only allow him to stay a few days.

Beware of Frauds.—Be sure you get the genuine Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. It cures Colds, Croup, Asthma, Deafness and Rheumatism.

Book Notices.

August is the great out-of-doors month, and St. Nicholas for August is a great out-of-doors number. The first story is entitled "Little Dame Fortune;" Helen Gray Cone goes with us into the woods and sings about "A String of Birds' Eggs"; Mrs. Frank M. Gregory up among the Catskills; Laura E. Richards takes us for "A Pleasant Walk" in the fields, and Grace F. Pennypacker poetically interprets to us "What the Flowers Said." Then Mary Hallock Foote gives us a whiff of salt air in "A 'Constitutional' on the Beach." After that we can rink in imagination by looking at Jessie Curtis Shepherd's roller skating pictures, cool off with Lieut. Schwatka and "The Children of the Cold," and hear about "Beethoven" from Agatha Tunis. Then if we are "Ready for Business" we can still stay out-of doors and learn to be a "House-builder." Last of all, "Jack-in-the-Pulpit" will tell us who won the "Fifteen Owners Wanted" prizes.

The contents of the August Magazine of American History are so varied and engaging that a brief summary gives no adequate notion of their importance and substantial worth. Any of its articles, except for the necessary sequence of arrangement, might be taken as leaders in point of excellence. It has four essays on the Civil War. General Thomas Jordan's second paper on the "Beginnings of the Civil War in America;" General Henry M. Bist writes on "Cincinnati with the War Fever, 1861;" General John Cochrane discusses "The Charleston Convention;" Hon. James W. Gerald contributes a scholarly paper on the "Revocation of the Edict Nantes;" Ethelbert D. Warfield writes of "John Breckinridge, a Democrat of the Old Regime." The frontispiece to this superb issue is an exquisite portrait in steel of Major-General John A. Dix. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

The Art Amateur for August contains designs for a dessert-plate (eglantine), a cup and saucer (pansies) two panels in oil colors (flowers), and a chair back, besides monograms (in G), suggestions in metal-workers, and two pages of charming figures by L. Penet.. There is an article of special interest on "Victor Hugo as an Artist," with some striking examples of his work, and a drawing by F. A. Bridgman of the Great Frenchman after death. Other noteworthy articles are on "Picture Criticism," "A Newport Nursery," "Tricks and Mistakes of Bric-a-Brac Dealers," "How to Detect Spurious Sevres," and "Amateur Photography" with particular reference to landscape. Montezuma's "Note Book," dated from London, gives a vivid account of the Royal Academy Exhibition, and a page of Salon pictures forms the frontispiece. Price, 35 cents. Montague Marks, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

The Midsummer Holiday Number of The Century opens with a lively, anecdotal account, by Henry Eckford, of life at "Camp Grindstone," the summer meeting place, for games and races, of the American Canoe Association, in the Thousand Islands. A portrait of William Lloyd Garrison, engraved by T. Johnson from a life-size photograph in the possession of the Garrison family, is the frontispiece of the number; there is also an interesting group portrait of Garrison, Wendell Phillips, and George Thompson. His son Wendell Phillips Garrison describes the origin of the great antislavery advocate and his son Francis Jackson Garrison recounts his boyhood. Kenyon Cox furnishes a number of charming decorations and initials to Ernest Whitney's poem. The fiction of the number embraces "A Story with a Hero," by James T. McKay. A paper "On Hotel-keeping—Present and Future" is contributed by George Iles. The August contribution to The Century War Series, besides Mrs. Burton Harrison's recollections of "A Virginia Girl in the First Year of the War," contains papers by General Fitz John Porter on Malvern Hill—"The Last of the Seven Days' Battles," and another chapter from the "Recollections of a Private." In "Topics of the Time" are editorials on "The Merit System," "The Revised Version," and "The Christian Congress."

SEASHORE AND MOUNTAINS.—There is scarcely a summer resort of any prominence north or east of Boston that cannot be reached by the Boston & Maine railroad and its numerous branches. Its eastern division runs along the coast and passes through all those beautiful seashore towns, surrounded by their broad beaches and beautiful scenery, whose natural attractions make New England the summer paradise of the land, while its western division, taking its course a little farther in the interior, passes through our favorite inland towns and villages, and winding its ways around the crystal waters of the great Lake Winnipesaukee leads into the very center of the White Mountains. Express trains leaves each of the depots in Boston several times each day, and make direct connection for all the principal points. Each train is provided with everything that can add to the speed, safety and comfort of its passengers, the equipment having been brought to such perfection that a ride over the road is itself a pleasure that cannot be left out of the account when summing up the enjoyment of a vacation trip to one of the resorts along its line. Excursion tickets are issued at reduced rates to all principal points.

The Nation's Hero Dead.

Every patriotic heart is touched with sorrow as it realizes the death of General Grant, after a long and painful struggle during which the whole nation watched by his bedside. Of General Grant's brilliant career it is unnecessary to speak, it is familiar to you all, and his private life and manliness of character is a lesson and an example worthy of immitation. What has been sympathy during these weeks of suffering is now turned to grief, and it is felt in every home and sable robes attest this truth. The feeling is universal; beyond sectional lines and even extending to foreign shores where noble achievements are honored. From humble circumstances he rose to the position of a great General and was afterwards called to the highest post in the gift of the people, and during his life when honors came thick and fast he was only a common American citizen, simple and honest. And his career in war and peace will make one of the most brilliant pages in this country's history.

"Soldier rest! thy warfare o'er,
Dream of battle-fields no more;
Sleep the sleep that knows no breaking,
Morn of toil, nor night of waking."

IT IS unofficially announced that Postmaster-General Vilas will repudiate a large number of post office leases made prior to March 3, 1885, for a long term of years at exorbitant rentals. This is proper as there is no question but what in many cases the last administration was reckless about leasing property for the government, and almost any price was paid for it.

SO IT IS decided that Hon. George F. Hoar shall deliver the address at the coming Republican convention at Springfield. We are glad that the committee decided to make the representation on the basis of the presidential vote, because there will be less people present to go to sleep in the hall while the "relic of the past" reels off dry statistics for three hours.

IT IS SAID that besides the high salary paid Pension Commissioner Black for attending to the duties of his office he also draws a pension for himself at the rate of $100 per month, for "total disability from wounds and general impaired health contracted while in the army." Isn't there a mistake somewhere, he seems to be doing the work of an able bodied man.

A LITTLE political talk is being heard. Gov. Robinson consents to run again, and no doubt Lieut. Gov. Ames is as willing to put himself in the hands of his friends for the second position, provided he can't have the first. Samuel Roads, Jr., of Marblehead, will probably receive the Democratic nomination for Senator from this district, and contest the field with Gen. Wm. Cogswell. Both men are popular and each would poll a large vote.

General Grant's Example.

(Correspondence of the Press.)

A man has just died whose life was replete with practical suggestions. His name and his deeds are upon every tongue. As a public man he has saved and guided his country; but has he done more than this for you and for me? Thousands of living Americans have never seen his face, and the coming millions never will. Has he done more for them than to record his name in history? He has, indeed. He has lived; and

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime."

Few great men's lives have offered a more practical reminder than has that of General Grant.

He was a man. Longfellow does not refer us to great authors, to great statesmen, or even to great soldiers, but only to great men. Great generalship, indeed, brought at last to public notice the distinctive manliness of Grant; but he was noble and quiet before ever he was General and President. On the farm and in the tannery developed the sturdy, unpretending greatness, which obscurity could not demean and which celebrity could not destroy. He was a man. It is his manhood that appeals to us, and his manhood that it behooves us to copy. Indeed, this is the only part of greatness that any of us can be quite sure of attaining. The art or the faculty of a great author or of a great general may be beyond us. Our great opportunity may never come. But this great man has taught us that character, not circumstance, is greatness. His virtues were largely of the attainable sort. He who may never conquer a Richmond or receive the sword of Lee, may yet emulate the conqueror's perseverance, and may equal his magnanimity. Not every man is humble enough to have trod Grant's path; but every man, in cabin or in mansion, may see the littleness of his own pride effectually rebuked by Grant's grand simplicity.

The possible sublimity of our own lives may take shape if we consider the obscurity of almost two-thirds of his. A birth and boyhood on the rough frontier, a not very remarkable career at West Point, a creditable but unrewarded service in the Mexican war,—these were followed by years of patient and honest, but obscure and unromantic toil;—toil lacking not only the blazonry of fame, but also lacking even the satisfaction of success. What promise here that in the latter third of life his greatness should be known and read of all men? What matter if it had not been so known and read? His manhood would have stood for what it was worth in tannery or tent. Still, it is true that in those toilsome middle years, he had not found his work. He was not born for farm or tanyard. But when his opportunity came, he stepped calmly into the great work appointed to him with a fitness for it, acquired, who shall say how, if not by the cultivation of that manliness which had grown to be his in his smaller sphere. Earnest young men will not quarrel with circumstances; and there will be found a work for them to do.

Sublimity of life! Was it his, and can it be ours? Much of his life, no doubt, as it passed, seemed to him, as ours does to us, anything but sublime. Much was, to him as to us, prosy, tiresome, and dull. But when we, on this vantage ground, look back over all his life, there is a sublimity about it that is not intellect, that is not generalship, that is not statesmanship,—but that is manhood. It is possible for us to be men. No greater thing can be said of you and of me in the final summing up of qualities,—if, indeed, we shall be so happy as to be reverted to,—than that which Hamlet was moved to say of his father dead,—

"He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again."

Many of our farmers very justly complain that they are overrun by berry pickers, who not only lawlessly tramp about the grounds and gather berries, but often take down fences and neglect to put them in a secure condition. It would seem that if the berries are worth going for they would be worth asking for.

The Massachusetts wheelmen have two meetings this fall, both in Worcester. They will gather August 5th to choose a state secretary and treasurer, and change their by-laws to conform with the national league, and on Sept 24th, they will meet again with a social object.

The engine J. C. Ayer, that runs through to Danvers on the six o'clock train, and was also on the new Sunday train, has a chime whistle and it sounds like a fog horn a short distance away.

Carefully peruse the long list of excursions and prices of tickets advertised in another column by the Boston & Maine Railroad. The list includes all the principal places in the Mountain region.

"A forced complexion" is what it is now charitably called.

Editorial Correspondence.

Jefferson is by far the best spot to enjoy the scenery of the White Mountains in quiet. From no other point can be seen Mount Washington and the others in its range, the entire Presidential range, Cherry Mountain, Prospect Mountain, Starr King Mountain and its range—all at one time from the verandah of our hotel. With the aid of a glass Mount Mansfield in Vermont can be seen on a clear day, and the trains ascending and descending Mount Washington can be seen nearly every day. As we mentioned last week the track of the land slide is plainly visible—the base of Cherry mountain being about four miles distant from the hotel. Excursionists from all directions are seen going to the slide—in Mountain wagons, barges, back-boards and every conceivable kind of conveyance. On Sundays the crowd is immense. To-morrow (26th) fifteen car loads from Concord, N. H., alone are expected, besides others.

Any description that can be written fails to give an adequate idea of the slide in its full extent of devastation. In two minutes from the start, the new house and barn of Mr. Stanley was in ruins, and his crops a total destruction. It followed the mountain stream taking heavy boulders, large trees and every thing in its trail. These at present remain as they were left. The barn of Mr. Stanley was a new one—about 120 x60 feet—and his house was nearly completed. The carpenters were at work on it the morning of the slide, as early as six o'clock. Mr. Stanley was the first to discover the slide. He had just time to warn the carpenters to "run for their lives, for he believed the mountain was coming." He himself just stepped aside, clearing himself from its track by a few feet only. So narrow was his escape from being buried in the ruins. Had he been living in the new house, which would have been the case the following day, there would have been no escape. The barn and house was torn into fragments, and carried several rods. The highest part of the barn—up the mountain,—was carried the farthest. The cow that was being milked by the hired man got away—more fortunate than the man—and the horse. Several cows and other live stock were buried in the debris and still remain there, covered with six or eight feet of ruins. The spot where the hired man was found—he has since died—is marked by a stake and an appropriate inscription. Very likely a monument will be erected later on. In Boston the wood from the house and barn—shapeless though it is—and the logs and trees borne down by the slide, would be utilized. Here they are worth little or nothing, and will probably be allowed to remain. A road through the debris is being made to clear the regular path, by the town, and it is nearly finished.

The loss to farmer Stanley is irreparable. A small orchard and a little patch of potatoes are all that remain of his land that is not covered. How these escaped is almost a miracle. By some co-incidence the track of the slide was turned a few feet, and the orchard saved. Above the house of farmer Stanley still stands the Frenchman's house, unharmed. It was just a short distance from the track. The foot of the slide—covering Mr. Stanley's farm and extending for a long distance is a mass of earth and rubbish. It has grown now hard enough to tread. Yet every now and then the traveller will be warned of its treacherous condition by a soft spot, causing him to sink down some inches. The space looks nearly half as large as Boston Common. Much has been said of the sums of money sent to farmer Stanley. These rumors are considered here to be greatly exaggerated. Some donations he has certainly received, but they are not of any great amount. Last Sunday he had erected a small shanty, where eatables were dispensed, and soda water, ginger ale and other small drinks sold. Nearly every one patronized the farmer, and during the remainder of the summer he will be able to do a thriving business in this way. He has sold a part of his farm to a gentleman who will assist him, and a large dining saloon is being constructed, and will be ready to-morrow. Here the hungry and thirsty crowd will be entertained, and the farmer and his partner cannot fail to reap an abundant harvest. Lager was sold last Sunday and many of the excursionists were intoxicated. This will not be allowed in the future, the temperance laws of the state of New Hampshire are very strict, and twelve police have been detailed for duty to-morrow. It is rumored that parties from the city are contemplating the erection of a hotel near the site of farmer Stanley's house, and for some years it might pay. But for a permanent location it would hardly be desirable, as the view is limited in comparison with the site of the other hotels.

Waumbek Hotel, in Jefferson, is situated higher than Bethlehem. Persistent advertising has brought the latter place into notoriety as a relief from hay fever. It is is no better in this respect than Jefferson. The view of the mountain in Bethlehem is limited—the hotels are situated on a long, dusty, hot street. Here the view is not obstructed by any thing. And this week, while we have been reading of the dizzy heights to which the thermometer has climbed in the city, there has not been a time when we were uncomfortable. From some portion of the hotel can always be discovered a breeze. The air at night is cool—and sleep here is a luxury, and one, too, that can always be obtained. A gentleman arriving a few nights since from Saratoga, unable to sleep there on account of the oppressive heat—was surprised to find that before the morning he needed two blankets to cover him. There is a beautiful grove, also, in the rear of the Waumbek, where several of the guests have hammocks and where a whist party can be discovered at almost all times. The parlors of the hotel are cool and airy. The guests are made to feel perfectly at home from their first entrance to this hostelry. The sanitary arrangements here are perfect—the proprietor having expended a large sum of money in perfecting a system of drainage which ensures freedom from all sickness. The water is clear as crystal, from a mountain spring in the rear of the hotel. Thus far the most of the guests we have met are on their first visit to Jefferson, and they are all loud in its praise and of the superb manner in which this hotel is kept. All regret the time of their departure.

The village was enlivened this week by a bear hunt, so to speak. Several bears had been seen in the vicinity of Starr King Mountain and traps had been set, Tuesday a young bear was caught. He was not large but full of fight, and it required the services of several men to secure him alive in safety. It was finally accomplished and the bear assisted down the mountain. It was ascertained that one of his legs had been broken and it was deemed advisable to kill him.

The hotel here is fast filling up. The late arrivals last night comprised, among others, Virginia Townsend, the well known authoress, and Ex-Gov. Alex. H. Rice of Massachusetts, and party. They will remain only for a day.

The railroad arrangements to Jefferson are excellent. Mr. Tuttle's new express train was found a great convenience. There was just time in Lowell to transfer baggage, and reach the mountain train without haste. The train thence is express, and a parlor car is attached running directly to this place without change. It is so also to Fabyans. Everything for the comfort of the traveller is done by the Boston & Lowell R. R. and under the supervision of Mr. Tuttle the passenger finds many little arrangements which hasten his passage and contribute to his pleasure.

Hose Company No. 2 have a base ball club formed from the members of their company, known as the Giants of Hose 2," of which Edward W. Pierce is captain. Last Thursday they visited Manchester-by-the-Sea and whipped the Stars of that town by a score of 40 to 10. Peabody firemen can play ball as well as put out fires.

The hydrant near Pike & Whipple's on Andover street was set back eight feet last Saturday by Daniel B. Lord in order to widen the roadway.

Four proposals for supplying the fire department with coal were received by Chief Tibbetts, who opened them last Saturday and awarded the contract to Wm. Pickering, Jr., & Co., of Salem, their bid being $4 per ton. The highest bid was $4.40 per ton. The other bidders were Smith & Parker of Salem, C. H. Warren & Co. and Merriam & Co. of Peabody and Danversport. The contract calls for twenty-five tons of best Georges Creek Cumberland coal delivered at the Central Station.

The first public building in town to be draped in respect to General Grant was the Central Fire Station, the whole front of the building being tastily draped in black and white, three pictures of the General with mottoes and American and signal flags. The four companies in the house paid the bills and did the work.

Hose 3 has neatly decorated their engine house in memory of General Grant. The work is nicely done and is similar in style to that done when Garfield was buried.

The department were nearly called out Monday evening by a sligth fire in the barn of Michael Carney. Children playing with matches set it on fire. A few buckets of water soon put it out.

The Peabody Base Ball Club has been organized with players as follows: M. McCarty, c.; J. McCarty, p.; Tom Monahan, 1st b.; William Frame, 2d b. and change pitcher; Jno. Leighton, 3d b.; Conners, of Danvers, s. s.; Crowley, fielder and change catcher, and Tom Carbrey and Ed. McCarty, fielders. They play at Danvers next Saturday and at Lynn the following Saturday.

WEST PEABODY.

The building committee of the West Peabody Church have awarded the contract for the building of a new chapel to Mr. Robert M. McCabe of Lynn. Work has already been begun upon the cellar. The cost of the chapel, exclusive of the cellar and furnishings, will be $1100. The building will be 40x27 feet, with a porch in front 10 feet square. The roof will have a steep pitch, and will be surmounted in front by a neat belfry. The finish in the gable outside will be with fancy shingle work. The windows will have ten large glasses each. Inside finish and door will be of white wood shellaced and varnished. There will be a 4 foot sheathing about the room, one foot of which will be placed on diagonally. The walls will be tinted. The floor will be of maple. There is a recess in the rear of the auditorium for the pulpit platform. The room will seat two hundred. It is expected that the chapel will be completed about Nov. 1st. Mr. Samuel Trask has generously donated all the brick that may be required. The lot is finely located and the church and congregation rejoice in this near prospect of a much needed house of worship.

Mr. Levi Spaulding has the contract to build a new barn for Mrs. Joseph Brown of West Peabody on the site of the one recently burned.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

It is a disgrace to this town, and a source of great annoyance and anxiety to the farmers, the way in which vegetables, fruit, etc., are stolen and carried off by wholesale in some quarters, or rather from all quarters, come the complaints. There is a hard working and industrious man, who carries on a piece of land above N. M. Quint's farm, and about the first of July when he went to pick his peas he found a man and two boys picking them not for him, but for themselves. On his approach they ran away. One day last week, he went up to the same field to see how his potatoes were growing, and what was his surprise to find that a piece covering nearly half an acre had been dug and carried off by parties unknown. So we might mention numerous other cases of theft and trespass. One of our farmers lost a quantity of onion seed, by some trespassers breaking off the tops just for cussedness, and leaving them on the ground. A farmer would be justified in treating any such intruder with cold lead, and an outraged community would back him up in it.

Mr. Henry Lufkin, a well known citizen, died at his home on Holten street last Saturday morning of pneumonia, at the age of 47 years. He had just recovered from an attack of slow fever, and contracting a cold, he was stricken with pneumonia. He was a soldier in the late war having enlisted Oct. 8, 1861, in Company 7, 23d Regt. M. V. M., being discharged for disability Aug. 14, 1863. He was born in Gloucester, and leaves a widow. He was prominently identified with the National Greenback Party, and often represented them in convention. He was also a member of the Spiritualist society.

Last week our item in regard to the Baptist parsonage site, gave a wrong impression, and our informant was mistaken. The parties who own the land are willing and have been to give a deed of the same, and Mrs. Sutton is also willing to keep her part of the contract, which is simply the buying of a piece of land, and deeding it to the society, as she had originally intended. The whole matter rests with the parsonage society, and the Baptist society as a society have nothing to do with it.

Mr. D. Azro A. Buck, who invented the Waterbury Watch, and a brother to the Buck who kept a shoe store here, has recently built an engine so small that with boiler, governor and pumps it would stand on a gold dollar. It is 5-8 of an inch high, had 148 separate pieces kept together by 52 screws, and 3 drops of water are required for the boiler. Diameter of cylinder 1-16 inch, stroke 3-32 inch, total weight 15 grains

A number of copies of the Pall Mall Gazette reached the town this week, and are being passed from one to another to read the recent exposures of the crimes committed in high life in London. After all the talk, it is not the fact that the crimes do exist in such horrid shapes, etc., that surprises the people so much, as that a leading newspaper has the courage to expose and condemn them.

Our sporting men are talking of the money they made at a cocking main, recently held in the woods at Montvale which was largely attended, and birds from Woburn, Cambridge, Salem, Lynn, Peabody, Quincy and other places were fought. There were nine battles in all, and Woburn carried off the most money, and Peabody men bet on Woburn birds.

Mr. John Hart, at B. F. Hutchinson's store is a very modest man. He showed us a new straw hat the other day, and requested us to say nothing about it, and when a fellow is as good about it as John is, why " mum" is the word with us, even if we have a suspicion that he has had the old straw bleached.

One of our physicians jumped into his buggy, which was in front of Grosvenor's the other day, and picking up the reins sang out, " get up" to the horse, but the animal only moved a few feet. The hitching post was too firmly imbedded in the sidewalk, and the doctor had forgotten to unhitch the animal.

The committee appointed by the G. A. R. State encampment to consider the matter, met in Boston and decided to hold a state camp and re-union of Grand Army men and veterans of the war at the Point of Pines, September 2 and 3.

The first night blooming cereus this season is reported from Capt. Wiley's on Lowell street, last Sunday evening.

A cow belonging to Frank Marsh was killed by lightning last Saturday, while in the pasture.

The employes of Chas. H. Tigh's morocco factory go on a fish fry tomorrow.

As Mr. Jefferson Stiles, who has charge of the berry pasture of Rev. Willard Spaulding, at West Peabody, returned home from the square last Monday, he found a colored man and two boys picking berries, and told them the conditions on which they could remain, but as they did not see fit to comply with the request he ordered them from the field. They refused to go, and Mr. Stiles kicked over a basket of berries belonging to the negro, where upon, with a threat to kill him, the negro knocked Mr. Stiles senseless, when he recovered he was bleeding badly from several bad cuts about the head, and his assailants had escaped. He came down and had his wounds dressed by Dr. Pike, and reported his case to the police.

The Board of Health are right after the nuisances about town. There was a case on Harris street where the cesspools from the Margaret Lynch estate overflowed and turned into the street a disgusting lot of filth the odor from which was fearful. Mrs. Lynch is away with her Albino children and the party having charge of it abated the nuisance last Monday. Another case was a public dump on Warren street, where fish mongers and others dumped their dead fish and fish cleanings, and where anyone who had any filth they wished to dispose of found a place to put it. The Board served a notice on the town requesting them to discontinue the dump and to clean up the offense part.

At a meeting of Union Post 50, G. A. R., held Monday evening, the matter of holding a memorial service on the death of Gen. Grant was discussed and the following comrades were appointed to confer with a committee of citizens in regard to it: C. T. Batchelder, Wm. F. Sumner, Benj. F. Beckett, W. F. Wiley, Geo. B. Miller, Geo F. Ward, C. J. Lenehan, F. Osborne, W. R. Armstrong, W. M. Ward and Geo. F. Barnes. The following were appointed a committee to draft resolutions: Frank E. Farnham, Henry Wardwell and S. C. Bancroft. A special meeting of the Post will be held next Monday evening, at eight o'clock.

There is a large black dog belonging in the vicinity of Washington street who likes to take a bath every day and is not particular where he takes it either. There is a resident on that street also who has a large tub in his yard in which he pumps water every day for his stock, and in this tub the dog persists in taking his bath, although he has been repeatedly driven away. Yet sometime during the day he will run into the yard and throw himself into the tub. It is quite annoying to the owner as it has to be emptied out and refilled before giving the cattle a drink.

Secretary Manning has issued a circular letter to manufacturers throughout the country, informing them that the tariff laws are largely evaded by undervaluation, and asking them to express their views as to the feasibility of simplifying the tariff and changing the ad valorem duties to specific. Information is also sought regarding the relative cost of manufacture in this country and in Europe. Excuse us Mr. Secretary, but we are too busy to send you an answer to-day, but will give you the benefit of our opinion shortly. Until then keep right on as you are doing now.

A singular accident happened to Mr Charles H. Dodge last Thursday. As he was driving down Boston street the runaway team of Anderson, the glue manufacturer in Salem, came up behind him, the horse raising himself in the air and coming down in his carriage, overturning it and throwing him out the horse falling at the same time and was secured as was also Mr. Dodge's horse. The carriage was badly wrecked and Mr. Dodge was severely bruised about the hands and arms.

We shall have to admit that for the past week the mercury has been tampering with our irascible temper to an alarming extent, but when we heard an exchange explain that a "whole suit of clothing without any person in them" were seen upon the streets of this town last Saturday, the melting mood of warm weather is too terrible to contemplate.

Mr. Wm. H. Hill, a young man employed at N. W. Edson & Co's., met with a painful accident last Friday. He was trimming a piece of meat when it slipped to the floor, and in attempting to catch it the knife which he held in his right hand cut the back of his left hand, completely severing the cord of the forefinger of that hand. He will be laid up for some time.

Mr. Francis Hobbs, a grocer, was driving along the road between this town and Lynn, last Friday, when he saw a large black snake on the side of the road make a jump and catch a bird in its mouth. Mr. Hobbs jumped from his team and killed the snake with his whip. It measured nearly five feet in length.

The screeching of the engine whistle on the gravel train has not been so hideous of late.

The postmaster general has approved a design for the ten-cent special delivery stamp authorized by Congress at its last session. The stamp will be about twice the size of the ordinary postage stamp and the shape of a dollar note. On the left of the stamp is a pretty vignette of a messenger boy in uniform. Across the top are the words: "United States special delivery," and along the bottom the price of the stamp, ten (10) cents, is expressed in figures and letters. Conspicuous on the body of the stamp are the words: " Secure immediate delivery at special delivery office."

BILIOUSNESS.

Bilious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, yellow eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. It acts upon the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.

EDDY, Solicitor of patents.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse."
CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office."
EDMUND BURKE, late Com. of Patents.

BOSTON, Oct. 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: you procured for me, in 1870, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you.

Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

Lines

Addressed to the photograph of a little girl, who, on its presentation, very soberly and earnestly remarked that she had not a pretty face.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMSON.

I gaze upon thy girlish face,
So fresh and young and stainless fair,
And in thy lineaments I trace
A deep, unwritten volume there.

Lo, I in every feature see
The mighty power of truth displayed;
And loyalty, whose potency
Will in thy heart reign undismayed.

I see upon thy noble brow
The pearls of virtue, trust and grace;
An intellect that shades it now,
In coming years to light thy face.

And in thy clear deep eyes discern
Wisdom and keenness lurking there;
The fire of pride and zeal to burn,
Through joy or woe, or bliss or care.

I read upon thy firm, set lips,
The inner language of the soul,
That will all outward words eclipse,
While struggling for some higher goal.

A love that through the flood and fire,
Will inward tempests ever curb;
Still growing nobler, purer, higher,
Whatever outward things disturb.

And, too, in thy clear eyes I see
The gathering tide of future years;
Thy joys, thy hopes, thy fears to be—
Behind the fire a trace of tears.

For these must come to thee my friend,—
"Into such life some rain must fall."
And with the rays of sunshine blend,
We each must drink our cup of gall.

But may no stain of error mar
The freshness of thy fair young brow;
And in the coming years afar,
May virtue grace it then as now.

And as thy years shall onward glide,
May generous deeds thy days engage
And pure sweet thoughts with thee abide
Along thy way from youth to age.

Then will the soul's true beauty show
Its shining impress on thy face,
And in the evening's hallowed glow
An added charm—a nameless grace.

Watching Our Words.

Keep a watch on your words, my darlings,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet, like the bees' fresh honey,
Like the bees they have terrible stings,
They can bless like the warm, glad sunshine,
And brighten a lonely life;
They can cut in the strife of anger
Like an open, two-edged knife.

Let them pass through the lips unchallenged,
If their errand is true and kind—
If they come to support the weary,
To comfort and help the blind.
If a bitter, revengeful spirit
Prompt the words, let them be unsaid;
They may flash through the brain like lightning
Or fall on a heart like lead.

Keep them back if they are cold and cruel,
Under bar and lock and seal;
The wounds they make my darlings,
Are always slow to heal.
May peace guard your lives, and ever,
From the time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be the words of beautiful truth.

Anon.

For Ever. Evermore.

BY BYWATER.

The river breathed soft music,
Amid the bending trees.
And pour'd its tender melody
Upon the scented breeze,
The bluebells on its margin
Their chimes in rapture rang,
As, tripping lightly through the grass,
A maiden sweetly sang:
O, love is like the ocean,
That spreads from shore to shore;
It never wanes, but deep remains
For ever, evermore.

The river breathed soft music,
Still softly flowed along
And flow'rets, on its grassy banks
Still listen to its song
That maiden heard with rapture
A melody more sweet,
For one who held her hand in his
Had ventured to repeat:
O, love is like the ocean
That spreads from shore to shore;
It never wanes, but deep remains
For ever, evermore.

The relative speed of English and American railway trains has been a subject of much heated discussion between travellers representing John Bull and Uncle Sam. A writer in the forthcoming (August) Harper's, in a paper on "English and American Railways," discusses the question in some detail, and sums up the controversy by declaring, "The truth of the matter is that we have trains in America which are as fast as the fastest trains in England and that they have trains in England which are as slow as the slowest trains in America," though the average speed is greater in England because of better road-beds, avoidance of grade crossings, a better system of signals, and shorter stops. On the other hand, "we carry our passengers, high and low, far more cheaply than they do in England." The paper compares the other points of the rival systems closely and interestingly, and is rich in illustrations by S. G. McCutcheon, Alfred Parsons, C. S. Reinhart, and others.

STREET GOSSIP, AS GLEANED BY Mulcahy
NOTES

It is a difficult job at best to raise a spring chicken when every other man keeps a dog. Our friend on Holten street, after four years waiting, had raised a hen to spring chickenhood, and only recently he found out she was a gay deceiver and it was a cruel blow. He slaughtered this inoffensive pullet to furnish food for his Sunday meal and found inside that she was a complete pin cushion. In her gizzard were eight pins stuck in various positions. Perhaps she was trying to pin her faith to the foreign ice cream man who supplies our hungry people.

Speaking of ice cream reminds me that I saw one of the bell ringers who dispense congealed corn starch around town do something the other day, that would offend the fastidious taste of some of his customers. He was selling ice cream at a house on Central street, and after dishing it out with a spoon, he put the spoon in his mouth and, after sucking off what cream adhered to it, put it back in the freezer.

There is likely to be a law suit grow out of the purchase of a bicycle by a boy in this town. Unknown to his father, the boy, who is fifteen years old, went to Beverly and bought a bicycle, and paid part down and started for home on the machine; he took a header however and the machine and himself were badly broken. About this time his loving parents found out that their treasure had a machine that was likely to be the death of him, and he was compelled to take it back and get the money he paid out. The former owner refused to receive back his broken machine, and will insist on the boy's paying for it. The father of the boy has brought a suit to recover the money paid, on the ground that the boy was a minor, and the Beverly party had no right to sell to him without the consent of his parents.

I was walking around town Sunday and was surprised to see the store of B. F. Stevens open, and on inquiry was told, that that too was a horse car office, and was kept open Sunday for that purpose. This is the most ridiculous thing I have heard of, the making of a horse car office of that little store. One horse car load would fill it to overflowing. In my judgment Mr. Stevens would show better sense to keep his store closed and let the other two take care of the traveling public. By the way, what has become of those conscientious scruples professed a short time ago against keeping open shop Sunday.

If there is any pleasanter way of passing a hot day than by taking a North Shore trip on the splendid and very popular steamer Empire State, it has not yet been discovered. A careful canvass of the vote shows that the public opinion is all one way on the question, and that there is nothing more cheering and invigorating than such a trip, and nothing more delightful than a moonlight excursion down the harbor on that safe, staunch, handsome, and efficiently officered steamer. Splendid music by the Empire State Band and Orchestra, and singing and dancing delight the excursionists, for whose comfort and pleasure nothing is left undone.

A mark down sale at the Naumkeag Clothing Co. is always an event of importance to their customers; but the sale now in progress surpasses anything attempted by them. Their large stock of men and boys' clothing is to be sold out at great reduction to make room for the fall trade. There will be money saved by purchasing goods at their present low rates.

Our readers should not fail to visit the store of F. W. Lucas & Co., the New England Boot and Shoe Store in Salem. He has all the nobby styles of ladies', misses' and gents' shoes in the best quality of goods, and the lowest prices. One price only is the rule at this establishment.

The foreman goes to the fishing banks,
The comps. to the sounding sea;
And the editor sits in the sanctum alone,
But the devil! Ah, where is he?
With the apples and pears to the editor sent,
He is having a first-class revel;
But the man of brains soon misses his fruit
And then he " goes for the devil."

KEEP IT PURE.

THE LIFE IS THE BLOOD—PREVENT DISEASE—SURGERY THE LAST RESORT—A TELLING LETTER.

Here is a fact for you to think over, viz.: Medical science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety they seem to have, proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints—some of them appearing almost directly opposite in their natures. When a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. But, while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.

It is conceded that DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "FAVORITE REMEDY" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from Cancer.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., March 22, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home, I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system, too, required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly commended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result surprised me, it was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since the "FAVORITE REMEDY," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that.

Yours, etc.,
MATTHEW FARRELL.
24 Adams Street.

In all cases when a consultation is deemed desirable.

Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. But, if you have not done so, adopt "FAVORITE REMEDY" as a household friend.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5, by all druggists.

Dr. Edward B. Foote as a representative of Eclectic Medicine, as a writer of popular medical literature, and as a physician stands prominent, and is, perhaps, better known by his writings than any other medical writer who has directed his teachings to the people rather than the profession. Born and raised among Connecticut settlers, on the "Western Reserve" in Ohio, he early began the work of many self-made men. Starting at the age of sixteen as "printer's devil" in a newspaper office, he worked his way to the editorial chair, and was severally connected with the most prosperous weekly of its time in Connecticut, and the first successful morning paper of Brooklyn, N. Y., but his main impulse had always been toward the study of medicine, and to this end business enterprises were sacrificed until in apprenticeship with a noted botanical specialist, and a course of study finishing with graduation, found him prepared to follow out the bent of his life to its completion. He was among the earliest of those who advocated the publication of anatomical, physiological and hygienic books for the masses, and his success in writing interesting and popular books has been conspicuous. His first and best known book, entitled "Medical Common Sense" reached a circulation of 250,000 copies, probably because of its originality and novelty in a new field; and his subsequent writings have been mainly in the same line, "Science in Story" having been written for the purpose of providing a readable book for children, and one which should make plain to their comprehension the facts which he considered it necessary for them to know concerning their own bodies.

In speaking of the late Prof. J. S. Smith, of Oxford, London, Nature remarks: "It has been said that in scientific thought, the best and most original ideas have always been conceived before the age of thirty." This is probably true, also, of the original of this portrait. His most radical thoughts were published in his first work, written before he was twenty-nine years of age, and though his pen is never long idle, his first success has not been equalled by subsequent work, though his "Plain Home Talk" a revision and enlargement of "Medical Common Sense" seems likely in time to obtain a circulation rivalling that of its predecessor.

In practice Dr. Foote has always been independent, progressive and original, always a foe of old-fogyism and trade-unionism in medicine; once a disciple of the old Thompsonian botanical school, as opposed to mineral and blood-letting practice, and now a staunch supporter of Eclecticism in all that the name implies. He has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession for thirty years, and as the portrait given here-with is from a recent photograph, hard work appears to agree with him, and he looks equal to twenty years more of it.

PASTRY WITHOUT BUTTER.—The American pie has been subjected to more unjust abuse from foreign writers than any other of our distinctive products, if we except the recent tirade against the American hog. And yet we cannot say that it has been altogether undeserved, because of the villainous compound, thick, hard and heavy, that is too often made to do duty as a "crust," and which by courtesy is called "pastry." Light, tender, flaky and digestible pie crust and all kinds of pastry can be made most readily by the use of Royal Baking Powder without any butter, or with half the usual portion, if preferred, or with a small quantity of lard or other shortening as desired. Pie-crust thus made is much more wholesome and digestible, besides being more economical and easier prepared. In addition to saving all the butter if desired, one-third the flour is also dispensed with, as the crust is rolled that much thinner, the leavening qualities of the Royal Baking Powder swelling it to the requisite thickness. If drippings or lard be used the Royal Baking Powder removes any unpleasant taste, rendering the crust as short, sweet and pleasant as if made from the finest butter. Those who know the appetizing qualities of the genuine home-made American pie will rejoice that by the aid of Royal Baking Powder in the pastry it can be made quite as digestible as it is delicious.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Services last Sabbath at the Rockville church in South Peabody and at the Branch church in West Peabody were in commemoration of the life, service and character of General Grant. The pulpit of the Rockville church was tastefully draped in mourning and bore a portrait of General Grant in front. Upon a stand to the left of the pulpit rested a flower crown surmounted by a cross, made up of white candytuft and ageratum, with a base of verbenas. There were two thousand flowers in this beautiful floral tribute, which was a symbol of the great man's finished work and of the honor and love with which a grateful nation crowns its hero. These tasteful decorations were the work of Mr. J. N. Newhall.

At West Peabody over the entrance of the school house, where services are held, was placed a large portrait of the dead chieftain, appropriatety draped in mourning, while above, in festoons, hung the flag which he carried to victory at the head of the Union armies. The text of the discourse which was preached by the pastor was from II Samuel 1:19, "How are the mighty fallen?" "This sad refrain, in the lamentation of David over the death of Saul and Jonathan on the disastrous field of Gibboa, is the wail which is heard throughout the length and breadth of the land, as fifty-five millions of people weep beside the bier of him, who, like the Father of our Country in his day, was 'First in War, first in Peace and first in the hearts of his Countrymen'."

The great soldier, the pure minded patriot, the honest statesman, the honored citizen, and the humble christian has at last succumbed to the disease, whose deadly attacks he was unable to ward off; but which he bore with that spirit of calm, patient, heroic endurance that was characteristic of the man, and that inspired the government, the army, and the people with confidence, in the dark days of civil strife; the spirit that is always master of the situation and insures success; and that in these last months of physical weakness, weariness and suffering, has given his soul the victory over sin and death.

> His carven scroll shall read:
> Here rests the valiant heart,
> Whose duty was his creed—
> Whose choice the warrior's part.
> Who, when the fight was done,
> The grim last foe defied,
> Naught knew save victory won—
> Surrendered not—but died.

Great in life, he was greater still in death; and while the world looks admiringly upon his wonderful achievements, he won his greatest victories on the battle ground of his own heart and in the quiet of the sick chamber.

After tracing at length the career of Gen. Grant, dwelling especially upon those incidents in his battles and campaigns which illustrated his sparkling military genius; and touching upon those phases of his life which brought out in relief the characteristic traits of the man, and the simple grandeur and beauty of his character, the pastor said in closing:

His chamber of sickness became the sanctuary, where amid suffering he gained his greatest victories, the victories of hope and love and christian truth. Ministered unto by devoted wife and children he seemed to live for them. His devotion to those who were so near to him, for whose sake he tried to be cheerful and to appear strong, have touched the hearts of men and women throughout the civilized world. How tender the message that went forth from his couch of suffering on last Easter day, wishing the kind regards of all, even of those who had not been his friends. How sacred the interviews between himself and his pastor. How reverent his attitude in prayer. How holy the scene as the waters of baptism are placed upon his brow. His work on earth completed, he calmly awaited the summons of the great captain of his salvation. The summons came last Thursday in the quiet hush of the summer morning; and while the nation wept with those who stood about the couch of the dying hero, his soul passed on from the quiet shades of that now hallowed mount to the "Mount of God." So one more choice spirit has departed from among men, and while we deplore our loss we rejoice in his eternal gain.

Great as was the military genius of Gen. Grant, it is the man, after all, that we admire. Though a soldier, he was a man of peace. He never liked his profession. As President, he referred a great national dispute to a peaceful tribunal rather than to the arbitrament of war. He was a man of the people, believing in them and moving among them, preserving thus his simplicity of habit, and his strong confidence in republican institutions and the American character. He was modest, and of a retiring disposition. When the war broke out he would have accepted a subordinate place in the Quartermaster's department at Corington, Ky., had he not already promised Gov. Yates of Illinois, that he would assist him in organizing the troops in that state. Of himself he said, "There were a thousand of others who could have done the thing as well as I, I am thankful to God that He helped me to the work, but had I not been living, or had the government passed over me, there are other men who would have won the victory for you." Gen. Grant was pure minded, for no one who was intimate with him can recall a single sentence or word that he would hesitate to repeat before a lady. He was a humble Christian, the youth of our land should not forget his words of advice to the Sunday School children. "Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of your liberties; write its precepts in your hearts, and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for all the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future. 'Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people.'"

Let all the people ponder well these words of the general, when they hear of the flippant and inane tirades against the Christian religion which a certain officer, far below him in rank and true worth, is uttering up and down the country. The true heart of the people will instinctively bow with reverence before Him whom the great Chieftain hurted, and who sustained his spirit amid all its earthly vicissitudes and trials and experiences. We rejoice to-day that the Saviour of our Country,—the great soldier of the age, was a humble "soldier of the cross," and that his soul has passed on to enjoy the victories of the faithful. Our Lord and Saviour gave him the crown of life because he has fought the good fight, kept the faith, and amid all the din and confusion of earthly wars and temptations and successes and power, has laid hold upon eternal life. God pity the widow and children of such a husband and father, and bless the Nation he was called to save.

In South Peabody, July 23, Mrs. Martha B. Stone, aged 67 years and 1 month.

The suddenness of this good woman's death has been a severe shock to her family and friends, also throughout the entire neighborhood in which she resided,—"Aunt Martha," as she was familiarly called by old and young, was one of those genial, kind hearted women whom everybody loved and whose every day life seemed to be made up of pleasant words and smiles. Ever willing and ready in the hour of need to lend a helping hand, she was eagerly sought at the bedside of the sick and dying, where her comforting words were as balm to many a weak and weary one. Her benevolent disposition and sympathizing heart won her hosts of friends. Throughout her life time she was energetic and ambitious, and by her own exertion alone had reared a large family of children, having been left a widow since the year 1849, but God had spared her when she was most needed, and now her children may well "rise up and call her blessed." We truly sympathize with the family in their bereavement, knowing by experience that there is "no home without a mother," but yet we surely feel that she hath found everlasting rest.

> O noble face of perfect peace,
> Untouched by passion, freed from pain,
> The high, celestial beauty wears,
> Of finished work, of ripened grain.

Several loads of people went to Ipswich and Byfield berrying, last Sunday, from this place.

Mr. N. Putnam is having an addition built to his cow barn on Lynn street.

Mr. Geo. Wilson, of Michigan, is visiting his sister, Mrs. Tudbury on Lynn street.

CORRESPONDENCE

BENNINGTON, VERMONT.

If memory serves me I am quite sure I heard in Peabody, last Tuesday, the remark:—"Isn't this a hot day?" 100 degrees in the shade and an eight hours' ride by rail in prospect for Wednesday! It was not altogether a pleasant anticipation, but the reality was kinder than the prospect. We left Peabody at 6.45, and Boston, via Fitchburg and Hoosac Tunnel Line, at 8.30. (For the benefit of any reader who may wonder what we did with three quarters of an hour between the Eastern and Fitchburg depots, we will say, in parenthesis, that excursion tickets cannot be bought at the station; 250 Washington street, is the place, and one should allow for a trip to the latter before taking his seat in the cars.) The air was cool; the scenery for the most part new, and as the more varied scenery of the "Hill-country" came to view, the slight discomforts of a long ride were forgotten. It is related that in the early history of California, the crying of a baby was once heard in a theatre filled mostly with men. It was an unusual sound; many a man had not heard the like since leaving his eastern home. A voice was soon heard from the midst of the audience:—"Stop the play and let's hear that baby cry." A feeling somewhat akin to this we have heard expressed by those who, in early life accustomed to our rugged New England scenery, have for a time sojourned amidst the monotony of a level country. Such an one, returning to his childhood's home, must rejoice at the sight of familiar, wild and broken scenery; and one born to the mountain scenes of Vermont might exclaim exultingly with William Tell:

> "Ye crags, ye peaks,
> I'm with you once again."

There is nothing in eastern Massachusetts to equal the views along the valleys of Millers and Deerfield rivers, especially the latter which becomes more wild and rugged as one nears the Berkshire Hills. The track closely follows the river banks as it afraid, straying from the guiding stream, it should get lost in the woods. These rivers are of considerable consequence when judged by the power furnished to the many mills along their winding banks; but one cannot help wondering at their present shallowness, and wishing he could see them under the stirring influence of a spring freshet.

But the culmination of the day's ride to one new to the route is, of course, the Great Bore, the Hoosac Tunnel. The noonday sun shines hot and unclouded. A brakeman suddenly makes his appearance and proceeds to light the lamps. This is the first sure sign that we are nearing the tunnel, though several times before hills have reared themselves in front of us, apparently with the intention of saying: "thus far and no farther." The first sign of near approach was the heaps of broken stone; the next, the hasty closing of all windows by the brakeman, and—now we are in the tunnel and under the mountain. The lamps shine brightly; the atmosphere in the car slowly becomes smoky and grows warmer. Ten minutes of increased noise and smoke and heat and intense outer darkness, and we once more are in the sunshine. After all it is only the Salem tunnel put through the process of simple multiplication. Bennington is reached by a roundabout way through York state, the railroad entering the town from the north. Being quartered with friends at their private house we have nothing to say of the hotels of which there are several.

Bennington streets are well and abundantly shaded. It is a busy manufacturing village. The entire town has a population of a little more than 6000. There are no mosquitoes here or next to none, the average being only one a piece to the Massachusetts people who are here, and one may sleep with wide-open windows without fear of annoyance from these busy singers. As one walks the streets he is struck with the prodigal use of white marble flagstones. When whole and well laid they make a good sidewalk, but in many places they are mostly otherwise, and are too suggestive of a poorly kept cemetery. But lest I take too much of your space I will reserve mention of special attractions, the various manufactures, and other matters pertaining to the historical locality, for another letter.

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils for throat, and frequently by both channel.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individual at different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of a notable size, on which traces of blood may at times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant snuffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertious. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical for mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, loss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lightbill to decide on the first examination as to the cureability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of

The Essex Bar Association has received a life-size painting of Judge Geo. F. Choate of the Probate Court, by Vinton. It is a fine likeness and will be hung in the court house.

In compiling our list of heavy tax payers we inadvertently left off several of our "solid" citizens without whom our tax rate would be considerable larger. We refer to James P. King, who pays $509; Henry A. King estate, $315.90; Eben U. King, $153.32; Perley King estate, $1154.84.

Mr. George E. Spaulding and Miss Sarah B. Brown, formerly a teacher in the Centre school, were united in marriage last Thursday evening at the home of the bride in West Peabody. Rev. Willard Spaulding officiated. The newly married couple will reside at 54 Holten street, where they will receive their many friends.

The Orange Mass., correspondent of the Athol Chronicle, says: "A gentleman by the name of Fellows from Peabody, Mass., bought some weeks ago, a piece of land located on West River Street, McKenna Street and Walnut Hill Road, and known as the "Maynard Pasture." Mr. Fellows was in town the last week surveying this land into streets and building lots, which he will sell or lease to laboring men on reasonable terms. This is a movement in the right direction, a neat, comfortable, cheap house is what the laboring man needs.

Six or seven dump cars ran off the track at the West Peabody gravel pit last Saturday in the meadow and laid there in a heap.

Mr. N. C. Patterson has arranged an ice water tank in the wash room on the north side of the town hall building, where the cooling fluid will be drawn at all hours to quench the thirst of the occupants of the building. The water is in a six gallon jar, and the space between it and the woodwork of the tank is filled in with saw dust.

The Essex County Sons of Temperance Union will hold its next meeting in Salem, on Monday, Aug. 10. The business meeting will be held in Creamer Hall, 243 1-2 Essex street, at 10 A. M., and at 12 o'clock horse cars will be taken for the Willows, where a genuine picnic will be held. A large attendance and a pleasant time is anticipated.

Mr. A. W. Jones, who has a branch factory in the rear of L. & G. H. Poor's shop, is fitting it up with elegant new machinery, among it a patent sectional pulley of the latest pattern and painted red on the inside. His extensive works on Wallis street will shut down shortly while the employes take an account of stock, after which they will be prepared to sharpen lawn mowers and pick-axes as usual.

It is no wonder that their are attempts at burglary around town, people are so careless about locking up their houses at night. The police found a window in the first story of a house on Main street wide open the other night, with not even a screen for protection. A person could have easily entered without disturbing the inmates. As it was it was with difficulty the police aroused them.

The heaviest shower of the season struck us about five o'clock last Saturday evening, and rain fell in torrents flooding the streets and washing them out in many places but not making them dangerous. The lightning struck in several places but no one was injured. It struck a tree on Midway street and the Mt. Vernon street entrance of Harmony Grove, and a number of telephone poles between here and Lynnfield. It played along the telephone wires over the exchange with a report like artillery and finally ran to the ground behind the block. The air was charged with electricity all the evening and sheets of lightning followed each other in rapid succession.

David Murphy, who, until recently, resided at Frog Island, was arrested last Thursday on the charge of incest with his own daughter, a girl fifteen years old. The girl had told her story to Dr. Pike and Judge Osgood of Salem, but when she was put on the stand as a witness against her father, she denied that he was the cause of her trouble and said she had met a strange man in the woods. Murphy was discharged.

The sad sight of an intoxicated woman was witnessed on Washington and Holten streets last Saturday. The woman was very large, weighing probably 200 pounds and could only get along by taking hold of the fence. At one time she was holding up a lamp post and talking in a maudlin tone to a black dog, who seemed inclined to prevent her going any farther in that direction.

Poet's Corner.

Coming Into Port.

I have weathered the coming cape of storms
Where the winds of passion blow;
I have sheered by the waves that gnash to foam
The shallows that lurk below;
I have joined in the surge of the whistling sea,
And the wild, strong stress of the gale,
As my brave bark quivered and leaped, alive,
To the strain of its crowded sail.
Then the masterful spirit was on me,
And with nature I wrestled glad;
And danger was like a passionate bride,
And love itself was half mad.
Then life was a storm that blew me on,
And flew as the wild winds fly;
And hope was a pennon streaming out,
High up—to play with the sky.

Oh, the golden days, the glorious days
That so lavish of life we spent!
Oh, the dreaming nights with the silent stars
'Neath the sky's mysterious tent!
Oh, the light, light heart and the strong desire
And the pulse's quickening thrill,
When joy lived with us, and beauty smiled,
And youth had its full, free will!
The whole wide world was before us then,
And never our spirits failed,
And we never looked back, but ever on,
Into the future we sailed.
Ever before us the distant bound,
Whose dim and exquisite line
Alone divided our earth from Heaven,
Our life from a life divine.

Now my voyage is well nigh over,
And my staunchest spars are gone,
And my sails are rent and my barnacled bark
Drags slowly and heavily on.
The faint breeze comes from the distant shore
With its odors dim and sweet.
And soon in the silent harbor of peace
Long-parted friends I shall greet.
The voyage is well nigh over,
Though at times a cupful of wind
Will rattle the ropes and fill the sails
And furrow a wake behind.
But the sea has become a weariness,
And glad into port I shall come,
With my sails all furled and my anchor dropped,
And my cargo carried home.

Blackwood's Magazine.

Too Late.

What silence we keep year after year
With those who are most near to us and dear!
We live beside each other day by day,
And speak of myriad things, but seldom say
The full, sweet word that lies just in our reach
Beneath the commonplace of common speech.

Then out of sight and out of reach they go—
These close, familiar friends who loved us so;
And, sitting in the shadow they have left,
Alone with loneliness and sore bereft,
We think with vain regret, of some fond word
That once we might have said, and they have heard.

For weak and poor the love that we expressed
Now seems the vast, sweet unexpressed,
And slight the deeds we did to those undone,
And small the service spent to treasures won,
Any undeserved the praise for word and deed
That soon have overflowed the simple need.

This is the cruel cross of life, to be Full-visoned only when the ministry
Of death has been fulfilled, and in the place
Of some dear presence is but empty space.
What recollected service can then
Give consolation for the might have been.

Farmers complain that of late years scarecrows have become entirely useless There was a time when one scarecrow with a St Patrick's hat and an Oskosh frock coat would protect a field from crows of average intelligence, but it is no longer efficacious. The crows have become familiar with the appearance of the tramps who infest all parts of the country, and it is well understood in crow circles that the tramp never carrries a gun, and is therefore harmless. The scarecrow so closely resembles the tramp that crows fail to discriminate between them, and imagining that the scarecrow is merely a contemptible tramp they steal the corn under the very shadow of his hat. If they could invent a scarecrow representing a tramp at work the crows would be vanquished. They would, of course, assume the working tramp to be a supernatural being, and the terror with which the sight would fill them would rid the whole region of crows for at least the present season.

A PARIS MYSTERY

Raoul smiled and opened the letter. Though he took it more quietly, I knew he was quite as anxious as myself. I watched him as he read; his glance seemed to fly along the lines; a look of satisfaction, almost exultation, came over his face, and I saw that the good news had come. Raoul clasped my hand. "You were right," he said; "the comedy is accepted! Read!"—then sank back nervelessly on his pillow.

This was the letter:

ODEON THEATRE, Dec. 24, 186–.

"MONSIEUR: In the name of the administration of the Odeon theatre, I have the honor to inform you that your comedy, "The Gold of Toulouse," has been accepted for early representation at the Odeon.

"In my own name, Monsieur, allow me to congratulate you on your work. It is more than amusing; it is brilliant. This is the opinion also of my colleagues who have read it. I desire, Monsieur, to make your acquaintance, and request you to favor me by a visit on an early day.

"Your comedy will be sent almost immediately to rehearsal, and will be put on the stage after the withdrawal of M. Victor's piece, "The Hunting Party." I shall have the honor of intimating to you ere long the day on which you will be requested to send your comedy before the artists to whom the parts will be allotted.

"I subscribe myself, Monsieur, with every assurance of esteem, your very humble, very obedient servant,

"DESNOUETTES, Manager."

I shall not try to describe our proceedings during the next quarter of an hour—or rather I should say my proceedings, for Raoul lay in bed laughing, while I waltzed round the room, hurled the English book into a corner, read the letter aloud with comments, waved it triumphantly aloft, and performed other absurdities; I was, indeed, overjoyed. Raoul was going to be a great man!—he would rival Scribe, Angier, Sardou, those giants of the stage—he would make his way into the charmed circle of the Comedie Francaise! I said all this, which made him laugh more than ever. He begged me to sit down, before Pierre came up stairs to see which of us had gone mad.

"But you are satisfied?" I said to him, sinking at last, out of breath, into a chair. "Does that letter not flatter you sufficiently?"

"Satisfied—I tell you, Paul, this is wonderful! It is one of those things which happen once in half a century. Now that it has happened, I begin to wonder how I could ever have imagined it possible!"

"You must go to M. Desnouettes to-morrow! You must——"

"Ask him for a loan, eh?"

"And why not? He might have advanced you a few napoleons; it is the only omission I notice in his otherwise admirable letter. Money we must have. Who, after this, could go on translating English?"

"I am not going to borrow from M. Desnouettes."

"Very good; there is another way. Give me the letter, and I will turn it into money. Times will change in the Quarter before a man with a comedy accepted by the Odeon needs to starve!"

"By all means take the letter and get the money if you can. And now, like a good fellow, give me pen and paper. I have three lines to write—you can guess to whom."

"Of course. It's a pity we can't spare her the letter, is it not?"

"I will tell her the good news. How it will rejoice her! Last night, after I left you, Paul, I saw her. We talked of this very thing, of the comedy. Like you, Gabrielle never lost faith in it. She has prayed to the Virgin every night that it might be accepted."

"Well, it has been, anyhow. Here are the pen and paper. Wait one moment while I put some water in this ink; it is almost dry."

Just then there came a knock at the door. It was Pierre who entered.

"It is the coat of M. Girard," he said; "Nannette bids me say that she has done her best, though a tailor would doubtless have been more skillful."

"How, my coat?" said Raoul; "what, then, was the matter with my coat?"

"Monsieur has, then, forgotten?" said the servant; "the sleeve was torn from the wrist right up to the shoulder!"

At this moment I had my back turned to Raoul's bed, being engaged at the wash stand in dropping water into the ink bottle. A sudden cry of alarm from Pierre startled me:

"Quick, Monsieur, quick!—he has fainted! My God, he is dead!"

I flew to the bedside. Raoul's face had become of a deathly pallor; his eyes were closed; his lower jaw dropped down; his right arm hung flaccid over the bed.

"Gracious heaven!" I cried in alarm; "what is wrong with him? Quick Pierre, dip this cloth in cold water—then run for brandy—run your fastest! Here is—oh, my God, I have not a sou!"

"Say not a word more, Monsieur! I will hasten—I will fly—I will bring the brandy! Let Monsieur be at ease—there is no need of the money"—and here this paragon of servants had rushed off and down the stairs before I could say a word. I had passed my arm under Raoul's head, and was bathing his brow with the wet cloth. Before Pierre came back he had revived, to my intense relief. He opened his eyes, and looked me wildly in the face. "I had forgotten that!" he said, in a voice quite unlike his own, and with a shudder I could feel.

"Forgotten what, my dear Raoul?" but again his eyes had closed, and his head dropped back on my shoulder.

Pierre returned after a short absence with the brandy. We made Raoul drink some: presently he came out of the second fainting-fit, and looked at us curiously.

"What is wrong?" he said.

"Monsieur has fainted," said Pierre; "Monsieur feels better now, is it not so?"

"The good news has been too much for you, dear Raoul," I said; "you are certainly unwell. Shall I bring a doctor to see you?"

"On no account. I am better now—quite better." The tone in which he said this was very decided. "As you say, it is no doubt the sudden joy that has overwhelmed me. I shall sleep now, and to-morrow I shall be quite recovered."

He seemed disinclined to talk further. I sat beside him, watching, till he fell asleep. There was something in his manner and appearance that puzzled me and made me anxious, for I had never seen Raoul like this before. I began to fear lest this might be the beginning of a serious illness, and yet, on the evening before, at the cafe of La Source, he had seemed to be in his usual health. There was nothing that I knew of weighing on his mind; he had had no quarrel with Gabrielle; the comedy had been accepted. It must, I thought, be the sudden coming of good news, acting on a temperament naturally high-strung. Raoul had a splendid physique. His figure was lithe and slim, like an athlete's: indeed, he had quite a reputation at the gymnasium in the Rue de la Sorbonne. But irregular dining will try the best constitution; and Raoul, like many writing men, was a creature of nerves. In this way, sitting by his bedside, I explained to myself his fainting fit and random words. Soon I saw him slumbering peacefully. This reassured me, and I retired to rest.

CHAPTER III.

The next forenoon saw me on my way to the house of Levi Jacob, the usurer, with the Odeon letter safe in my pocket. Raoul had passed a somewhat restless night, but in the morning professed himself quite well. There could be no breakfast for either him or me until money was got, and hence I lost no time in paying my visit to the little Jew.

Between the Rue St. Adre des Arts and the new Boulevard St. Germain there lies quite a labyrinth of narrow, dirty, crooked streets, alleys and courts, surrounded by lofty, decaying houses. A stranger would certainly have lost his way amid the intricacies of this quarter, but I, to my sorrow, was no stranger there.

In one of the narrowest, dirtiest streets on the left bank, you will find an archway with a broken lamp over it and the words, half obliterated, "Cour de Rohan." If you pass through it into the squalid, noisome court, you will find a door in the right hand corner with a much battered zinc plate on it, bearing the honored name of Levi Jacob, "broker, money-changer and lender on pledge." If you go any farther than this, you will be sorry for it.

From Levi Jacob's window on the sixth story, the highest but one, a cord with a weight at the end of it hung down to the level of your hand. You had to pull this cord before it was possible to hold any communication with Levi Jacob.

I pulled the cord; after some minutes' delay the window was cautiously opened, and the little usurer's wrinkled, bearded face, with its curved nose and glittering eyes, appeared over the sill. He recognized me at once.

"Ah, it is Monsieur! I have the honor to salute Monsieur! Will Monsieur give himself the trouble of coming upstairs?" This was said in a shrill, cracked voice, and the words had no sooner been uttered than the head was withdrawn and the window shut.

I lost no time in running upstairs, and was at once admitted. I need not enter into the details of my somewhat lengthy negotiation with Levi Jacob. It ended by my putting my name to a piece of stamped paper, and receiving, in exchange, ten notes of twenty francs each.

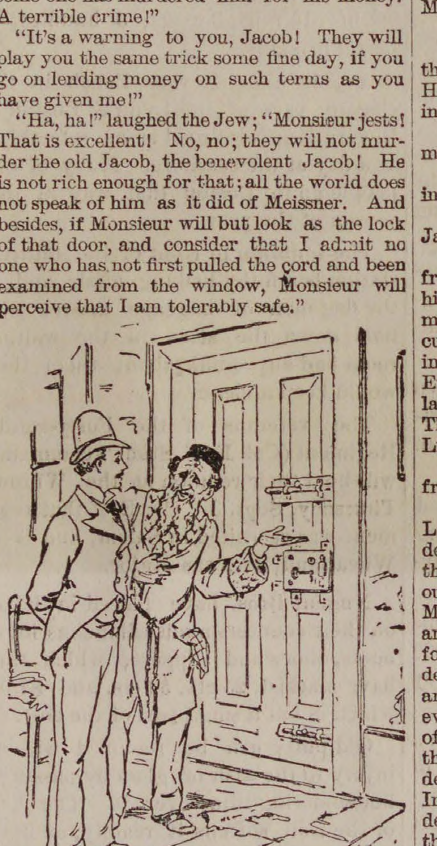
"I hope that Monsieur is satisfied," said Levi Jacob. "I am always charmed to oblige Monsieur; there is none of my clients whom I esteem so highly. It is cold to-day, and the snow under foot is very disagreeable. Ah, yes, it is a severe winter; one has to spend a fortune on firewood! Monsieur has perhaps not seen the journals this morning?"

"No, I have not seen them. Is there any news?"

"Ah, that is a dreadful murder which has been committed—Joseph Meissner, of the Passage de Mazarin, one of my co-religionists. I have met him at the Bourse, this Joseph Meissner; he was a very rich man; indeed, all the world spoke of his riches. Doubtless some one has murdered him for his money. A terrible crime!"

"It's a warning to you, Jacob! They will play you the same trick some fine day, if you go on lending money on such terms as you have given me!"

"Ha, ha!" laughed the Jew; "Monsieur jests! That is excellent! No, no; they will not murder the old Jacob, the benevolent Jacob! He is not rich enough for that; all the world does not speak of him as it did of Meissner. And besides, if Monsieur will but look as the lock of that door, and consider that I admit no one who has not first pulled the cord and been examined from the window, Monsieur will perceive that I am tolerably safe."



"Monsieur will perceive I am tolerably safe."

I looked at the lock, which was certainly of portentous size and strength. "It is true," I said to him; "you are safe here."

"Be your own servant," went on the old money-lender; "that is my notion of security. Had Meissner done as I do, doubtless he would be alive at this hour. And as to the terms of which Monsieur complains, let him in common fairness consider all things. There is the letter, no doubt; but let Monsieur reflect on the risk I run—on the many accidents that may come between the friend of Monsieur and the money he expects from his comedy! To no other than Monsieur would I lend on such security. It is my esteem for Monsieur, my confidence in his honor—ah, old stupid of a Levi Jacob, why wilt thou ever let the heart mingle with affairs!"

"One makes nothing by discussing. It's a Jew's bargain, that's all. Good day, Jacob. I wish sincerely I could say farewell!"

"Ha, ha! Monsieur is always so amusing. Good day, Monsieur! Take care of the third step from the top, Monsieur; the wood is rather rotten. My respectful congratulations to the friend of Monsieur. Good day! Monsieur, good day!"

It was with a light heart that I hastened back to the Rue Dauphine. The present possession of 200 francs cast into the shade the terribly hard bargain which Levi Jacob had driven with me. Passing Magny's on the way, I ordered an excellent breakfast for two to be sent to Rue Dauphine, No. 28, in a quarter of an hour.

"What success?" cried Raoul, as I entered the room. He was still in bed, but looked much more cheerful and like himself.

"Behold, sluggard, the fruits of my early labors!" and I spread the twenty-franc notes under his astonished eyes.

"Two hundred francs! It is a masterpiece of borrowing!"

"Fresh from the coffer of the most grasping Israelite in Paris—my old friend Jacob of the Cour de Rohan. But I had to leave the talisman in his hands."

"The Odeon letter?"

"Yes. Jacob was too polite to say so, but it might, you know, have been a forgery. He therefore made it a condition that the letter should remain in his keeping."

"It does not matter, so long as we get the money."

"And will you not go to-day, Raoul, to see the director? We are now in funds, and if a new coat——"

Raoul interrupted me. "I shall not go out to-day," he said emphatically, and with a touch of irritation in his tone; "why should I? I can go to see the director to-morrow, next day, any day—it is of no importance when. Why should you want to make me go out to-day?"

"My dear Raoul," I said, surprised, "I don't want to make you go out. There is, as you say, no necessity. And, now that I think of it, you are still an invalid; you are entitled to lie in bed."

"I still feel rather light-headed," he said in his natural tone; "and I have the touch of temper that proves me an invalid, have I not?"—smiling.

"You gave me a terrible fright yesterday, Raoul," I said; "I never saw you like that before."

"Oh, I am better now—at least almost better; only I feel rather lazy. I have quite an appetite, Paul. Did you order breakfast?"

"From Magny's; it will be here directly. Listen! that is the chink of plates and glasses on the stair."

We made an excellent breakfast. Anybody who knows Magny's will understand that the wine was of unimpeachable quality. Raoul's gayety seemed quite to come back to him. I remember well how merry we were over that meal, the last that we were to sit down to together in our old garret of the Rue Dauphine. We proposed toasts alternately. We drank to the Administration of the Odeon, to the health of Levi Jacob, to the health of all our creditors, to that of Magny's cook, and finally to each other's.

"I have laughed enough," said Raoul, at length; "I must lie quiet now for a while. What do you propose doing this afternoon, Paul?"

"I feel virtuous, industrious. It is the reaction from my visit to Levi Jacob; I have noticed the same thing before. There is a lecture on Roman law at three o'clock; I shall go there. I shall also visit the pawnbroker and redeem our law-books, and a few other things. I have been missing my dressing case most horribly."

"Good; as for me, I shall rest till dinner-time. Shall we say seven o'clock?"

"Very well; seven o'clock. I shall order it at Magny's in passing. Till then, good-bye, my dear fellow—and keep always better."

"Good-bye, my friend!" said Raoul, stretching out his hand to me. I think I still see the expression on his face—half-wistful, half-cheerful. I took up my hat and portfolio, and departed.

CHAPTER IV.

I was strolling down the Boulevard St. Michael, after attending the lecture on Roman law, when I met by chance Thouvenot, a friend of mine, and a law student like myself. Thouvenot proposed a game of billiards; and, feeling the need of distraction after my late effort of industry, I agreed.

We went to the Cafe de la Cigarette, where the young ladies who serve you are all dressed alike in red, and where everything is very gorgeous. We played several games at billiards and had several glasses of beer, spending the afternoon thus very agreeably. Then Thouvenot said all at once:

"My dear fellow, I have a proposal to make."

"What is that?"

"That we go for a walk; that we visit the Morgue."

"And why the Morgue, of all places?"

"Why? because all the world is running there to-day, and we may as well run too. Have you not read in the journals this morning of the murder of Joseph Meissner?"

"Ah, I have been told of the murder of this man. Did you know him?"

"To my cost; he was the closest-fisted Jew in the Quarter."

"Impossible. Think of my friend Levi Jacob."

"He was infinitely worse than even your friend Jacob. Some poor devil has murdered him out of revenge, I fancy. But you really must hear the details of the affair; they are curious, I assure you. It is the most promising mystery since the affair of Menilmontant. Euphraise, my angel"—to one of the young ladies in red—"be good enough to bring me The Figaro. Ah, here is the paragraph. Listen!"

The paragraph which Thouvenot read me from The Figaro was as follows:

"MURDER IN THE PASSAGE DE MAZARIN.—Last evening the inhabitants of the Quartier des Ecoles were thrown into excitement by the intelligence that a frightful and mysterious crime had been committed in their midst. Mons. Joseph Meissner, of Jewish nationality, and by profession a money-lender, had been found murdered in his room, No. 13 Passage de Mazarin. The facts, so far as yet known, are these: About a quarter-past seven last evening a man out of breath and in a state of extreme agitation presented himself at the bureau of police, Rue des Saints Peres, declaring that a murder had been committed. Interrogated as to his name and avocation, declared that he was called Jean Mouton, and that he was janitor of the house No. 13 Passage de Mazarin, between the Rue St. Andre and the Rue de Biche. Declared further that one of the tenants of the house was Monsieur Joseph Meissner, a Jewish money-lender, who had a room and cabinet on the second floor. That Joseph Meissner was a man of eccentric habits, and, among other singular instructions, had given him, Mouton, this—that if on any day he failed to appear at 6 o'clock, the hour at which he invariably went out to dine, his room should be forcibly entered without loss of time. On this evening—the evening of Tuesday—6 o'clock had sounded from the church of St. Augustin, and Meissner had not appeared. Such a thing had never happened before, the old money-lender being always remarkably punctual. The janitor became uneasy, remembering the instructions that had been given him. He waited till the bells of St. Augustin tolled the quarter, then went upstairs and listened at the door of the room. Not a sound was to be heard. He sought to peer through the keyhole, but the interior of the room was quite dark, and he could see nothing. He came downstairs again; went up a second time; the same dead stillness. His uneasiness grew to alarm; nevertheless, he waited till 7 struck from the church tower, then went to ask the advice of his friend and neighbor, the sieur Francois Bastoul, publican. Bastoul, having heard Mouton's story, strongly advised him to do as the old man had bidden him, and offered to help him in breaking open the door. Having provided themselves with a crowbar, they went up to Meissner's room; listened, called, knocked, shook the door; no answer. They then forced the door open with their crowbar. The sight that met their eyes filled them with horror. The corpse of Joseph Meissner lay before them on the floor, in the middle of a great red stain that covered the planking. The body lay upon its face, huddled together as if it had fallen from the chair that stood in front of the writing table. The furniture of the room had been thrown into confusion, and the cabinets and lock-fast places bore the appearance of having been forcibly opened and ransacked. At first the janitor and his companion were too much horrified to do, or think of, anything; but at length Bastoul proposed that they should instantly close the door, without touching the body where it lay; and that, while he himself kept watch outside, Mouton should run at full speed to fetch the police. This he did; and Superintendent Ledru, having taken down his story, at once accompanied him to the scene of the crime. Everything was found there as Mouton had described it. We are informed that the police have discovered, beside the corpse of Joseph Meissner, a dagger of foreign manufacture, used beyond doubt in the commission of the crime; also an ivory wrist stud, with an initial on it, in all probability dropped by the assassin. It is thought that these articles cannot fail to give a clew to the discovery of the guilty person. Meanwhile, the janitor, Mouton, has been placed under surveillance."

"Well, Marsal, what do you think of that?" said Thouvenot, as he laid down the paper and relit his cigar. "Was I not right in calling it a promising mystery?"

"Certainly. This will flutter the Rue Jerusalem, I should think. The police have their character to regain."

"Precisely what is said here in The Figaro. And now, let us stroll down to the Morgue, and see what is to be seen."

"But what is to be seen?"

"Why, the dagger that the old Jew was stabbed with. It is being shown at the Morgue to-day, and they say there has been quite a crowd to see it. Let us go."

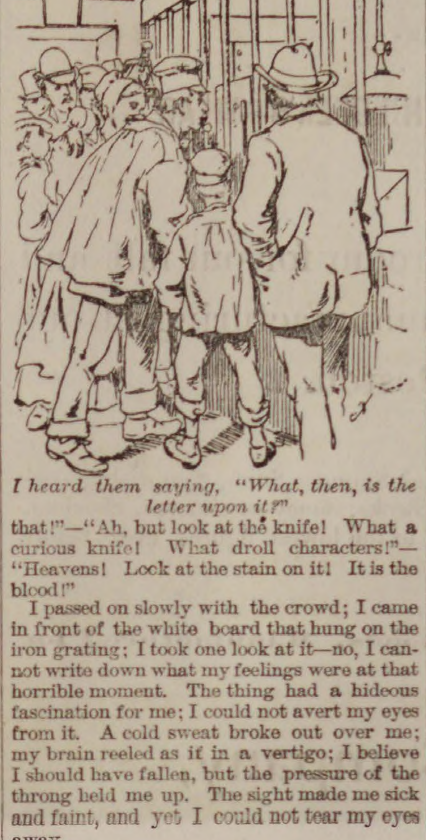
"As you like. One other glass of beer, and I am ready."

We had the other glass of beer, then walked down the Boulevard St. Michel in the direction of the Morgue, Thouvenot regaling me on the way with various anecdotes of the murdered man to illustrate his avarice and eccentricity.

It was by this time past five in the afternoon, yet there was still a crowd at the door of the dead-house. The people formed a line stretching along the Pont de l'Archeveque, and we tailed on to the end of it.

"Here we are at last!" exclaimed Thouvenot as we crossed the threshold, wedged in tightly by the throng. "Heavens, what a crush! It is always so at these gratuitous spectacles."

The murder of Meissner seemed indeed to have caused an unusual sensation; all these people were talking about it, and showed the liveliest anxiety to get a good place for seeing. Around me were heard such exclamations as these: "Oh, Monsieur, you elbow me!"—"A thousand pardons!"—"Pardon, Madame, but your basket incommodes me!"—"Ah, heavens, take care! you tread upon my heel!" Through this little storm of ejaculations sounded at regular intervals the deep voice of the guard: "Now, then, pass on, ladies and gentlemen! A little more quickly, if you please." Ahead of us, I could see the people staring at a board hung on the bars of the grating, behind which stood the two rows of dark slabs, empty and uninteresting to-day. "See! There is the button!" I heard them saying. "What, then, is the letter upon it?"—"It is a C."—"No, it is a G."—"Yes, certainly, it is that!"—"Ah, but look at the knife! What a curious knife! What droll characters!"—"Heavens! Look at the stain on it! It is the blood!"



I heard them saying, "What, then, is the letter upon it?"

I passed on slowly with the crowd; I came in front of the white board that hung on the iron grating; I took one look at it—no, I cannot write down what my feelings were at that horrible moment. The thing had a hideous fascination for me; I could not avert my eyes from it. A cold sweat broke out over me; my brain reeled as if in a vertigo; I believe I should have fallen, but the pressure of the throng held me up. The sight made me sick and faint, and yet I could not tear my eyes away.

This was what I saw, exhibited on that board at the Morgue: A white ivory button, about the size of a two-franc piece, with an initial G. upon it; under this was written: "Wrist-stud found beside the body, supposed to belong to the perpetrator of the crime." Below, a long, keen-edged dagger, its hilt of lacquered wood, its blade of dark-blue steel, with some eastern characters graven on it, and, stretching from the point about half-way up the blade, a dull stain upon the gleaming metal. Under the weapon was written: "Poniard of Japanese manufacture, found beside the corpse of Joseph Meissner, with which the fatal blow is supposed to have been struck." At the foot of the board were these words: "Any person having information to give with respect to the murder of Joseph Meissner is requested to communicate with M. R. Roguet, judge of instruction, at the prefecture of police."

All this has taken time to describe; I seemed, however, to grasp all the details in a single glance; it was as if these fatal pieces of evidence burned themselves in on my brain. You see, I recognized, or thought I recognized, the wrist-stud and the dagger, and the possibility they suggested to my mind overwhelmed me for the moment. I gasped for breath; I strove to raise my hand, that I might press it over my eyes and shut out that terrible testimony that stared me in the face, and would not let my vision go. But the pressure of the crowd held my arms as if pinioned, and swept me slowly along past the bars of the outer gate; then relaxed, and left me free to move. I had become separated from Thouvenot in the crowd; for this, even then, I felt a momentary thankfulness. My sole desire now was to escape from that ghastly Morgue, to leave it far behind. I had come to it as a scarcely curious spectator; I left it with the frenzied haste almost of a madman. I am persuaded that, had either of the skilled detectives afterward concerned in this case seen my manner of leaving the Morgue, they would have arrested me on suspicion there and then.

Whither I went after recrossing the bridge I cannot now remember. I walked on, or rather half ran, quite aimlessly; a dull, red mist seemed to hang before my eyes, and prevent my seeing anything distinctly. I was unconscious of being looked at or pointed at, unconscious of time or of fatigue. My one clear idea was that I must fly as fast and as far as possible from that hateful Morgue and its choking atmosphere of crime.

When I came to myself—for in truth I had been for the time distraught—I found myself on one of the quays on the left bank, in the extreme west of the city. The thought came to me that I must do something; that I must think calmly of what that something ought to be. Darkness had come on; the lights of Paris stretched in a long line before me down the right bank of the river; snow had again begun to fall. I sat down on the quay-wall, looking into the black water of the Seine, and forced myself to reflect. I cannot think that any criminal was ever more wretched than I at that hour.

I do not know how long I sat there, absorbed in most miserable thoughts. But at last something like a plan came into my mind. Retracing my steps toward the Rue Dauphine, I stopped at a kiosk on the Boulevard, and bought an evening paper—The Temps. I opened it under the light of a street-lamp, and read this paragraph amid the falling snow:

"THE CRIME OF CHRISTMAS-DAY.—To-day, there was a considerable crowd at the Morgue, to inspect the articles on which the police must chiefly rely in their attempt to unravel the mysterious affair of the Passage de Mazarin. No arrest has yet been made, nor, so far as is known, is there any one even

Three Peculiarities

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier and regulating medicine, is characterized by three peculiarities, namely:

1st: The combination of the various remedial agents used.

2d: The proportion in which the roots, herbs, barks, etc., are mixed.

3d: The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

The result is a medicine of unusual strength and curative power, which effects cures heretofore unequalled. These peculiarities belong exclusively to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are

A Round Trip.

Peabody is now the center of three lines of street railway. Could some of our ancestors look back and see our square with its costly soldier's monument, our elegant public and private buildings, and see our horse car tracks extending in different directions, and then compare it with the time they passed away when a wide pebbly brook crossed the square, where the farmer was wont to water his horse and wet his wheels as he drove through it—could he stand and watch the cars as they pass and repass before him, and look along the tracks which radiate in different directions, he would feel like a stranger in a strange place. These street railways, while they are built to accommodate the business portion of the community who desire to live in the suburbs, are also built with an eye to pleasure travel, and while they serve to bring the adjoining towns into closer social relations, they also furnish recreation and pleasure to many families who could not afford to travel in a more expensive conveyance. Among the numerous routes by which, for a very small sum, a person can enjoy a long and circuitous ride, is the newly opened one of the Salem & Danvers Company between this town and Danvers. Taking the car at the square, we lean back in its comfortable seats as it runs smoothly over the rails. It is not crowded and we have abundant opportunity to enjoy the ride. Passing up Central street on either side are fine residences and pretty homes. After passing the Bowditch School house we enter that secluded section of our town known as "the lane," whose people are supposed to never come any nearer to the square than "Martin's" store, except on rare and special occasions. Above the school house is the potter shop, the last relic of the once famous Danvers crockery establishments. On the right is the old Buxton house, which is over two hundred years old, with its small windows and roof on one side sloping nearly to the ground, and still in so good repair as to be tenantable. A little beyond is the Bowditch house, so called from the fact that Nathaniel Bowditch at one time lived there, while opposite in the junction of three roads is the last remaining relic of former days, the "town pump;" and a few feet away under the shade of two beautiful elms is the old "log," where the laners have congregated every day for years and discussed politics, scandals and high taxes, and there they sit to-day, and while some look upon the horse cars as an innovation, others are thankful, as it gives them new topics for discussion and shows them many new faces that would not otherwise reach their section of the town. At this point the car turns up Andover street and we cross the railroad bridge and come almost immediately into a country district with cultivated fields around.

On the left is the Kendall Osborne farm with its large and substantial house with a grove of noble chestnut trees in front, furnishing an abundant shade. Our car continues on a level road and on either side are broad fields covered with garden products; here the smell of the onion, the famous Danvers onion, is mingled with that of meadow flowers and new mown hay. From this road may be seen on one side the beginning of Waters river, now only a little brook, and then as it winds its serpentine way among the meadows, it broadens, till it is lost to view in the distance. From here also can be seen the woods and hills in the direction of Danversport, with an occasional church steeple towering above all. On the other side beyond the thrifty farm lands can be seen the buildings of the Danvers Insane hospital, with its numerous towers outlined against the sky. The route continues on a level grade till the entrance to the Rogers' estate is passed. This estate with its driveway shaded with ancient elms, speaks of the luxury and comfort of the occupants. From here it is down grade and we pass Pike & Whipple's carriage factory on one side and Mount Pleasant on the other and continuing along past the little "red school house" and beyond, it is an up grade and an old fashioned mile stone marks the line between Peabody and Danvers. Here again are thrifty farms of well-to-do-farmers, and besides fields of vegetables are acres of sage, thyme, etc., while on one side is an ancient sage drying house propped up by heavy timbers to resist the bleak north winds. The car runs along the side of the road which is shaded by Maple trees, whose limbs have been cut away to allow the car to pass, and for half a mile it is like passing through a beautiful shaded wood. On the left is the Peabody estate with its house of colonial architecture secluded among a forest of large trees. Now we are turning into the street leading to Danvers Plains, on one side is the brick residence, with a three cornered lawn in front, of Mr. Tapley, on the other is a long low building which the town of Danvers, in pursuit of economy, uses for a double purpose, one end is a school house and the other looks like a barn, but a fellow traveller tells us it is a hose house. The ride for the next quarter of a mile is similar to that through which we have passed until we reach the pond near Putnam's mill, and ascend the hill beyond, passing the finely kept and beautifully laid out grounds of the Peabody Institute, the gift of that philanthropist who was unwilling to know any other than the old undivided town of Danvers as his home and birthplace.

We pass the Institute and town hall, the railroad station and elegant residence of Mr. H. M. Merrill, built with great care and of original designs such as would do credit to a millionaire. We stop to change horses at the square and are half tempted to leave the car for a seat on the shaded piazza of the Danvers Hotel, which occupies a corner lot and is just retired enough to avoid the dust. With fresh horses we pass through the main street of Danvers with its stores on either side and it almost seems to a stranger that there were no two in the same line of business, judging from reading the signs. On the right hand side in an imposing wooden building is the Danvers Mirror office, the only paper in town and one that abundantly covers the field. On the left side is a hose house and a school house in close proximity, while just before reaching the little depot of the Boston & Maine road we come to the Maple street church, the society of which have more than helped make the history of the town. As we turn in the direction of Putnamville the large and extensive shoe factory of C. C. Farwell & Co. is on our left, and from here to the end of the route we pass the rich and elegant homes of the good people of Danvers, with here a beautiful lawn with lawntennis or croquet grounds, and there a garden of exquisite flowers the fragrance of which reaches us as we hurry by, and then we come to a part of the road lined with shrubs and underbrush and can imagine ourselves back in the country. At the foot of a hill, the top of which we could not see, is the terminus of the road. Retaining our seats we start homeward, and as we again reach the pretty homes in this section we can but wonder how the occupants reached the village before the horse car track was laid. Passing over the same route, although we could have changed cars at the square and gone to Salem, we see new beauties and new things to interest us, and reach home after a ride of an hour and a half, much refreshed and decidedly pleased. The ride to Danvers and Putnamville is by far one of the pleasantest and most interesting of any reached by street railways from this town.

A GOOD DOG STORY.—A gentleman informs us that he was in New Hampshire last summer, when the following incidents came under his observation. The men were mowing in the field, and accompanying them was a large Newfoundland dog, that watched the operations and saw some moles start in the grass; the dog caught several, digging for them and killing them. All at once the dog disappeared and was gone for some time. Looking up the field in the direction of the farm house, our informant saw the dog trotting down towards the men and by his side was trotting the house cat, the greatest cordiality always existing between the two animals. The dog brought the cat directly to the swath, and soon pussy understood what was up. As soon as a mole was started she caught and killed him, and when one retreated to a hole the dog scented and dug him out, the cat in this case killing the mole; and so the dog and cat hunted together for quite a time until they wearied of the sport. We suppose we shall be told that instinct governed the animals and that they had no language in which to communicate with each other:—Woburn Advertiser.

Parker's Hair Balsam— made in New York, I think—did wonders for me. Try it if you have occasion. It really does what I say, and restores the color also.' Not a dye, not greasy, highly perfumed. MESSRS. EDITORS.—Although every manufacturing community may have its chief trade or industry, yet probably no production of these industries enters more largely into the business interest of the nation than iron. Thus iron might be considered as the barometer of trade. As the sudden falling of the mercury denotes violent changes in the atmospherical world, so does the periodical decline in the price of pig-iron indicate an unhealthy depression in all other manufacturing industries throughout the world. In the spring of 1872, the country was prosperous and advancing beyond all past history, railroads were extending their lines across the continent in every direction, making the most gigantic railroad expansion the world ever beheld, giving an impetus to the iron manufacture that had no parallel in this or any other country, running the production to nearly three millions of tons that year. All at once comes a snap and a crash, a reaction sets in so speedy and terrible, so general and decided, that all other industries became paralyzed, and there was a general stagnation in all manufactures. The decline in the price of iron since 1872 is from forty to fifty per. cent. Iron masters are crying out "give us protection or we are ruined." Why seek the advice of the political doctors? Let the Republicans advocate a protective tariff and the Democrats sound the bugle note of free trade, till the angel Gabriel shall blow the last trumpet. What does it avail? The remedy at present is not to be found in a tariff alone; a home competition is here in our midst, more formidable than all foreign competition combined. Throughout the iron region of the Union, there are at present time over seven hundred furnaces, some of which cast one hundred tons of metal per day, ready to swell the home production on the first show of an advance in price beyond the most extraordinary consumption, and producing a stagnation more disastrous than ever. In all manufactures the capacity of this country to over-produce is out of all proportion to the power and ability to consume.

This fact was very plainly exemplified in the iron business of 1879. Just as soon as the people saw that iron had started upward every old furnace trap in this country, that had been idle for years, was repaired and put to work and run to its full capacity, and in the spring of 1880 it was plain to be seen that everybody intended to rush into the iron business, and that there was to be an enormous production of pig-iron. The fact of the business was, there were a million tons more iron made in 1880 than in 1879, and the consequence was, that the upward march in the price had to halt that year, and this very over-production has ruined the iron trade and brought about the unprofitable general business to this day. All persons who are interested in pig-iron and railroad and securities are anxiously inquiring into the probabilities of iron declining more. With over one-half of the blast furnaces in this country standing idle, and the greater number of those in blast struggling to pay expenses, this enquiry is one of great and exceeding interest. "Hard times" and "dull trade" are surely upon us for the next two years. The working man who depends upon his labor for a living, especially those engaged in the iron trade, surely have a dreary prospect, compelled by low wages to practice the most rigid economy in the necessaries of life, in the use of cheap flour, black molasses, pressed shoulders and store pay. And in the depression of the agricultural, manufacturing and industrial interests, as they will be depressed all over the land for the next two years, the sting of hard times will come to every man's home. All this may appear to your readers as a mere matter of prophecy, yet better times cannot come, and there will be no general recovery from the present depression in business till iron again shows itself in demand in the industries of the country, or not until we hear pig-iron demanding,

COMMISSIONER BLACK of the Pension Department at Washington brought himself somewhat into notoriety soon after his appointment, by requesting the resignation of Miss Sweet, who declined to tender it and who still "holds the fort," in Chicago. He has come still more prominently into notice by his recent appointment of pension examiners in Massachusetts. President Cleveland has said that he should hold his subordinates responsible for their appointees, and it looks as if here was a case worthy his attention.

The Board of Examiners for the Pension department is an important one. Their decision on cases submitted to them involves the expenditure, or non-expenditure, of thousands of dollars, by the Government—sometimes in a single case. Surely the examiners should have a reputation which is unblemished. It should be impossible to hint at charges such as are made by reputable practitioners against one of the Board whom Black has appointed.

The circumstances, in brief, are these: Commissioner Black re-organized the Board by the appointment of Drs. Whittier, Gavin and Bartlett as examiners. Dr. Whittier was a member of the old Board,—the only one receiving a re-appointment. It had been hinted that Dr. Bartlett was to be appointed, and remonstrances had been sent to headquarters by interested parties, with reasons why, in their judgment, he should not be one of the new Board. Proofs of alleged irregularities on the part of Dr. Bartlett, in his relation to insurance companies as medical examiner, were promised, and were in readiness. But they were not called for. He was appointed. At once Drs. Whittier and Gavin declined to serve, and gave their reasons to the Commissioner, and later Dr. Whittier, in an open letter published in the Boston Herald, gives the public the inwardness of the matter, and in such a manner as to cause Dr. Bartlett to bring action against Dr. Whittier for libel, placing his damages at $10,000.

But this is not all. Another physician of repute was given one of the vacant places caused by these two resignations. He owed his appointment to Secretary Endicott of Salem, and he, too, declined to serve with Dr. Bartlett, and was obliged, in honor, to write a long letter to Secretary Endicott giving the reasons for not accepting a position which the Secretary had been instrumental in gaining.

Commissioner Black claims to have investigated Dr. Bartlett's record, and to have found no reason why he should not have been appointed. This is how he investigated. He told Gen. Butler, who was Bartlett's counsel, and who also went to Washington to urge his appointment, that if he would return to Massachusetts, look the matter up, and report, he, commissioner Black, would abide by the decision. Of course it was favorable to Bartlett. It was like making the attorney for the defense both judge and jury.

It is claimed by some papers that the difficulty is a personal one between Drs. Whittier and Bartlett. It is not often that a salary of $2500 a year is declined for any such motive, especially when the service requires so little time, and interferes so little with the regular business of a practitioner. The fact that three physicians of well known reputation declined to serve — solely from motives of honor—being unwilling to associate themselves with Dr. Bartlett, means something more than appears on the face of it. The outcome is anything but creditable to Commissioner Black. It is exceedingly so to the other physicians. And if President Cleveland means what he says, and he certainly has given evidence that he does, here is an excellent opportunity to investigate Commissioner Black.

We are informed that the attorney for Dr. Whittier is very desirous of seeing the libel suit of Dr. Bartlett brought to trial. He claims to be able to prove every allegation made by his client in the press or elsewhere; if he can, Dr. Bartlett is certainly not the man for the place. We don't care what his politics are; and it is not to be expected that the appointees of the new administration will be other than democrats. But such appointments as this do no credit to any administration—least of all to one which has set out with such loud pretensions.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BENNINGTON, VERMONT.

Beautiful for situation is this town of Bennington. A local writer says: "As the mountains are about Jerusalem, the cherished city of old, so they guard in rugged grandeur our beautiful valley. Snow-crowned in winter, sunlit in summer, they ever suggest to thoughtful winds the watchful care that never slumbers nor sleeps." The highest points are Bald Mt. on the east and Mt. Anthony on the west, the former being 3124 feet in height. Why called Bald Mt. is not clear to me, for it is covered thickly with trees to its summit. This I found out by investigation, having reached the top after a tramp of some six miles, and when there could see nothing but the trees close at hand. From a clear space on the side of the Mt., however, a beautiful view of town and country is obtained; but I doubt if this view would be of more interest to any reader than would the blueberries which I found. The trees for a space seem to have been cut off some time ago, and the blueberry bushes, taking advantage of the admitted sunshine, have covered the ground. The bushes are low and the ground for rods was blue with the ripe and luscious berries. It would be difficult, I think, to find another such spot, though the whole region seems to be wonderfully productive in the line of small fruit. Would that I could, in a balloon or some other aerial vehicle, transport my friends to this spot on the mountain side, was my thought. Vain desire. But if some good fairy could have transformed the three quart pail I had into a half bushel measure, I might have brought down sixteen instead of three quarts of genuine mountain blueberries.

At one thing which I have learned since coming here, I am much disappointed. The renowned battle ground which I hoped to visit is not here; it is some five or six, perhaps seven miles from the present Bennington, and the prospect of finding the spot which made Molly Stark famous is at present rather hopeless. A battle monument association was formed some years ago and it proposed to erect a monument at North Bennington, not, as I understand, on the battle ground. An advisory committee of the above association has recommended that the design be a massive shaft 300 feet high, to be built of Bennington blue limestone. In aid of this project, Vermont has appropriated $15,000, Massachusetts $7,500 and New Hampshire $5,000, the troops engaged in the famous battle having been mostly furnished by these three states, though Vermont was not at that time, 1777, a separate colony. Bennington has a small but in a general way quite a good public library, but the information one can get there in regard to the battle of Bennington is very meagre. A copy of the Centennial proceedings of 1877 one would think worth preserving, and the public library is the place where one would naturally look for it, but it is not there.

In manufactures the most important product is that of the hosiery mills—of which there are five, all doing a good business. Hosiery as produced here does not mean stockings, but knit woolen underwear, of which great quantities are produced for both ladies and gentlemen. The whole process of manufacture is carried on by each company, carding, spinning, knitting, cutting and making, being done under one roof. The red goods, cochineal dye, medicated to order, are the specialty in the mill which I have visited; and this, as is the case with the others, is making goods only on orders.

A large woolen mill, in which cloth was manufactured, formerly owned by the Fishers of New York, and employing four hundred hands, has been closed since the death of the owner. The Superintendent of this mill for the past six years was Mr. John Pilling, a native of North Andover. Other manufacturing establishments of interest to visitors are the pottery, which produces a great variety of stone ware; the acid works, which make acetic acid from wood; the ochre works which excavate the raw material from underneath these everlasting hills and prepare by washing, drying and grinding, the yellow ochre of commerce; and the Novelty Works in which all sorts of things are turned or cut from wood. Pill boxes, knobs, miniature barrels, toy rolling-pins, etc., are produced in great quantities and with great rapidity. One young man who was making knobs said that one hundred dozen was a day's work, and on his first day at the work he produced one hundred and three dozen.

The digging and smelting of iron ore, and the preparation of white pipe clay are industries no longer profitable, though once carried on quite extensively.

Wednesday, the 29th, was Barnum's day here, and almost the entire community took a holiday. Not a mill was running and the only people who seemed to have anything to do were those who supplied food and drink to the hungry and thirsty, and the store keepers who kept open shop to catch what trade they might from the country bumpkins who flocked in to see the elephant and bid Mr. Barnum a long and last farewell. In regard to supplying the thirsty, Bennington might well take pattern from Peabody. Gin-mills, as my informant calls them, are common, and their products of the usual quality. With the abundant supply of the purest spring water which all the surrounding hills furnish it would seem to be an easy matter to establish an occasional drinking fountain. As I write, five P. M., the town lamp-lighter has started on his rounds, and for two hours and more, burning naphtha will compete with sunshine.

Arrangements are being completed for a grand band tournament at Nantasket, to begin Sunday, August 9, and to continue until Monday, August 17. Mr. D. W. Reeves, of the American Band, will have the musical direction, and his well-known ability is guaranty that the affair will be satisfying. Engagements have been made with Dodworth's Band of New York, Colt's Armory Band of Hartford, Conn., Chandler's Band of Portland, Me., and several other first class organizations to combine with the American Band. There will be several great features in the daily programmes, including a large anvil chorus and a battery of light artillery. The hotels and cafes on the beach will make ample provision, and will prepare to feed twenty thousand persons daily. The steamers from Rowe's wharf will run every hour, and the cars of the Old Colony Railroad will land passengers at the beach, so that ample facilities will be offered excursionists to select from. The several railroads running to this city are arranging excursion trains, and there is promise that the enthusiasm of the great peace jubilee days will be revived.

THE SELECTION of Gen's. Buckner and Johnston of the rebel army, at the suggestion of Mrs. Grant, to act as pall bearers at the funeral of Gen. Grant, is received with satisfaction by the entire country. Their willingness to accept the honor is also evidence of the change in sentiment at the South with reference to the late war. From the press and people there comes a reiteration of this feeling, and in spite of the fact that Gen. Grant fought against them, they are disposed to remember his magnanimity towards the prisoners of war. In many cases it is seen that the South feel that their defeat was for their good, and are proud to be a part of the whole country which Grant fought to maintain. This feeling we hope will continue and grow with the coming generation. The resources of that part of the country are still undeveloped. They will be when fraternal intercourse between the two sections is fully restored.

The Boston & Maine railroad company have had mileage tickets printed for its road, and will soon issue them; this will be a great convenience to commercial men, who will purchase them; the tickets will probably be two cents a mile, or $20 for a book of 1000 miles.

General Grant's funeral takes place on Saturday of this week. A full and graphic account of the funeral, written by "Howard," the famous New York correspondent, will be given in the Sunday Globe the next day. George Alfred Townsend will also contribute to the same issue of the Sunday Globe, which will be a Grant Memorial number, illustrated. The next Sunday Globe will have such an immense sale wise people will order it of their newsdealers in advance.

The Odd Fellows will hold their picnic Aug. 24, at the Relay House.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Among the beautiful things in the post office and one that has attracted the attention of crowds of people of late, is the elegant pen picture in one corner of the frame above the desk, and surrounded by the advertisement of Mr. Samuel Trask. We have not had this explained to us, but we think it represents the genial proprietor after a day of weary toil at the store, or brick yard, at home, and enjoying himself in the hammock on the shady side of the house, where there is nothing to disturb his slumbers and the gentle breezes waft him to sleep and the broad canopy of heaven covers him and keeps off the mosquitoes (except one which is seen near his feet). The artist who conceived and executed this elegant piece of penmanship is a clerk in the employ of Mr. Trask. Probably he does not realize what excellent talents he has and what a great field—for improvement lies before him or he would not spend precious moments in learning the hardware business.

Lincoln C. Gordon, a colored cigar maker from Slade's shop in Chelsea, was before Judge Merrill last Saturday morning for assaulting Mr. Jefferson Stiles in the berry woods at West Peabody. Mr. Stiles was in court with his head plastered up with court plaster and told a straight, forward story about the assault and the negro also told his side of the story, claiming Mr. Stiles kicked him in the hand. Judge Merrill ruled that the provocation did not justify the assault and Gordon was fined $20 and costs or three months in the house of correction. The defendant had as counsel Mr. Walker, the colored awyer whom Butler tried to appoint Judge at Charlestown. This is the irst time a colored lawyer has appeared n our police court. Gordon remained n the police station till Monday fore- ioon, when his wife, a white woman, ame down and paid his fine and took im home with her.

When the ell was built on St. Paul's Church, it was found that they had run 21 inches over the line on the estate of the late Mr. Floyd. When it was built the church people went by a post on the fence, thought to be the line. It has since been discovered that the line was drawn by a post under the ground. They have tried to purchase or hire the 21 inches of the Floyd estate, but without avail. Consequently the church people have made alterations so as to bring their building into line. Calvin Pierce did the work.

To-Day We Buried The Baby.

To-day we buried the baby;—
And the house of its soul is bereft,
For of all my little treasure and joy
I have only memories left;
Not now, as in happy bygones,
His toys does he bring me to see,
For now, as I see his playthings,
They bring him back to me.

To-day we buried the baby;—
For he, with his little feet,
Had walked all the way to the Angel-land,
His white-winged kindred to meet;
While grandpa, who has been travelling
The same road many a year,—
So long that his steps are weary—
Has not reached half so near.

To-day we buried the baby;—
But still I never forgot
That we buried all possible troubles, too,
Which might have been his lot;
And sadly, yet contented,
"He has but gone," thought I,
"Home to our family mansion,
Where we'll join him by-and-bye."

To-day we buried the baby;—
We laid him asleep in a bed,
Beneath a rich green coverlet
By God's own hands first spread;
And yet I couldn't help thinking,
Though grief made my tears fast fall,
That the one for whom we were weeping
Was the happiest of us all!

WONDERS OF THE BODY.—Suppose your age to be about fifteen. You have 200 bones and 600 muscles; your blood weighs 24 pounds; your heart is 5 inches in length and 3 inches in diameter; it beats 70 times per minute, 42,000 times per hour, 100,800 per day, 35,792,600 per year. At each beat a little over two ounces of blood is thrown out of it, and each day it receives and discharges about seven tons of that wonderful fluid. Your lungs will contain a gallon of air, and you inhale 24,000 gallons per day. The aggregate surface of the air cells of your lungs, supposing them to be spread out, exceeds 20,000 square inches. The weight of your brain is three pounds. Your nerves exceed 10,000,000 in number. Your skin is composed of three layers, and varies from one-fourth to one-eighth of an inch in thickness. The area of your skin is about 1,700 inches. Each square inch contains about 2,500 sweating tubes or respiratory pores, each of which may be likened to a little draining tile, one-fourth of an inch long, making an aggregate length of the surface of your body of 88,541 feet, or a tile ditch for draining the body, almost 17 miles long.

Book Notices.

ALL THE SUMMER CHANGES.—No business man or pleasure seeker will think of looking for the above in any place but the old reliable Pathfinder Railway Guide which comes promptly to hand as usual, with all its time tables carefully revised to date. The July number carries the Pathfinder way above "high water mark" in several ways. It enters its 37th year this month, making it older than all others combined. It is the only 25 cent guide published, and the largest ever issued. The first of a series of interesting articles by the noted humorist and lecturer, "Bob Burdette," appears this month under the heading "Burdette's Vistas En Route," presenting in his inimitable style facts and fancies pertaining to travel. The "Legal Hints for Travellers," introduced last month with such success, are continued in the current number with an interesting article upon "Your rights and risks in relying on time tables;" also a list of the leading excursion books issued for free distribution by transportation lines, with other information valuable to all who travel. The magnificent colored maps that accompany the guide are of inestimable value, being the finest rail road maps ever issued. Don't leave home without a copy of the Pathfinder. Your dealer will furnish it for 25 cents, or you can address "Path finder," Boston

The August number of the Young Ladies' Journal has been received from the International News Co. of New York, and as usual it contains all the latest fashion in dresses, outside garments, underwear, etc., besides several pages of fancy work and novelties. The magazine contains some of the best continued stories that have been written, besides a large number of short stories, poetry, etc. The book contains a supplement with a large number of fashion plates, besides the double colored plates and patterns on the back.

MAN AND HIS MISERIES:—Man that is born of a woman is small potatoes and few in a hill.

He riseth up to-day and flourisheth like a rag weed, and to-morrow, or the day after, the undertaker has him in the ice box.

He goeth forth in the morning warbling like a lark, and is knocked out in one round and two seconds.

In the midst of life he is in debt, and the tax-collector pursueth him wherever he goes.

The banister of life is full of splinters, and he slideth down with considerable rapidity.

He walketh forth in the bright sunlight to absorb ozone, and meeteth the bank teller with a sight draft for $637.

He cometh home at eventide and meeteth the wheelbarrow in his path, and it riseth up and smiteth him to the earth, and falleth upon him, and runneth one of its legs in his ear.

In the gentle spring-time he putteth on his summer clothes, and a blizzard striketh him far away from home, and filleth him with woe and rheumatism.

He layeth up riches in the bank, and the cashier speculateth in margins and then goeth to Canada for his health.

In the autumn he putteth on his winter trousers, and a wasp that abideth in them filleth himself with intense excitement.

He sitteth up alll night to get the returns from Ohio, and in the end learneth that the other fellows have carried it.

He buyeth him a watch-dog, and when he cometh home the watch-dog treeth him and sitteth beneath him until rosy morn.

He goeth to the trot and betteth his money on the brown mare, and the bay gelding with a blaze face winneth.

He marrieth a red-headed heiress with a wart on her nose, and the next day her parental ancestyr goeth under with a few assets and great liabilities, and cometh home to live with his beloved son-law:—Puck.

TIRED, LANGUID, DULL.—Exactly expresses the condition of thousands of people at this season. The depressive effects of warm weather, and the weak condition of the body, can only be corrected by the use of a reliable tonic and blood purifier like Hood's Sarasaparilla. Why suffer longer when a remedy is so close at hand? Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will give you untold wealth in health, strength and energy. (A)

A large portion of the English army are now Nileists, yet they do not advocate dyin'-a-mite.

Beau: "Why do you prefer a wood fire?" She: "Because it pops."

BETTER THAN VACATION.—This is pre-eminently the vacation month, when thousands seek rest and recreation. But to those who suffer the depressing effects of summer debility, the disagreeable symptoms of scrofula, the tortures of biliousness, dyspepsia or sick headache, there is more pain than pleasure in leaving home. To such we say, give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. It will purify your blood, tone up and strengthen your body, expel every trace of scrofula, correct biliousness, and positively cure dyspepsia or sick headache. Take it before you go, and you will enjoy your vacation a thousand fold.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

KEEP IT PURE.

THE LIFE IS THE BLOOD—PREVENT DISEASE—SURGERY THE LAST RESORT—A TELLING LETTER.

Here is a fact for you to think over, viz.: Medical science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety they seem to have, proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints—some of them appearing almost directly opposite in their natures. When a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. But, while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.

It is conceded that DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "FAVORITE REMEDY" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from Cancer.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home, I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system, too, required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly commended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result surprised me, it was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since the "FAVORITE REMEDY," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that.

Yours, etc.,
MATTHEW FARRELL.
24 Adams Street.

In all cases when a consultation is deemed desirable.

Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. But, if you have not done so, adopt "FAVORITE REMEDY" as a household friend.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5. by all druggists.

Mosquitoes have not been as numerous this year as common and only occasionally one is heard humming about in the gentle evening, evidently reconnoitering for the general attack to come on this month. Hot nights may be endured when there is a clean, open field for fighting the heat, but it is another thing when the victim is subjected to the mosquito pest in addition. He slams and threshes around through the dark hours, and when daylight finds him, swollen, bloody and exhausted, tangled in the net, with the sheet twisted about his neck, and a dozen bloated blood-holders quietly sitting aloft viewing the picture of murdered sleep, the poor fellow may be pardoned for not declaring that he feels refreshed and eager for the toilsome duties of the day brought forth.

PENNYROYAL FOR CHOLERA MORBUS.—A correspondent of the Boston Transcript writes: Allow me to call attention to the simple but most effectual remedy for cholera morbus, an alarming disease often prevalent at this season of the year. This is the fragrant herb, pennyroyal, a wild growth of our New England hills and pastures; to be steeped and drunk as warm as possible and as soon after the attack as is practicable. In my own family it has this week proved its worth immediately on trial, and I should deem myself in the wrong did I not chronicle its virtues.

Keeping the head perfectly clean is a great aid to health. A distinguished physician who has spent much of his time at quarantine said that a person whose head was thoroughly washed every day rarely took contagious diseases, but when the hair was allowed to become dirty and matted it was hardly possible to escape infection. Many persons find a speedy relief for nervous headache by washing the head thoroughly in weak soda water. We have known persons almost wholly cured in ten minutes by this simple remedy. A friend finds it the greatest relief in case of "rose cold," the cold symptoms entirely leaving the eyes after one thorough washing of the hair. The head should be thoroughly dried afterward, and draughts of air should be avoided for a little while.

Two hundred and thirty trains daily arrive at the depot of the Boston & Maine railroad in Boston. This is a greater number then was ever before moved on the Boston & Maine and Eastern roads while under separate management. During 1884 both roads carried about 15,000,000 passengers. At the Boston & Maine headquarters, Saturday, it was stated that if the present travel to the mountains continued until the end of the present summer season, the number of passengers who will have been carried at the end of the year over the various divisions of the Boston & Maine will approximate 20,000,000.

If you want an ocean trip and can spend only a few days, the iron steamships of the Merchant & Miner's Transportation Company offer one of the pleasantest. The round trip from Boston to Baltimore may be made in five days, affording those seeking rest and a change of climate an opportunity to avail themselves of a most delightful sea voyage, at small expense. These steamers have first-class saloon and state-room accommodations, and in command of officers of long experience, and the courtesy and attention paid to the passengers combine to make the trip thoroughly enjoyable. C. P. Garther, 290 Washington street, Boston, is agent.

SPARKS.

Last Thursday evening at 8.45 o'clock fire was discovered bursting from the barn of George A. Needham, near the Newburyport branch railroad crossing on Lowell street in West Peabody, and before an alarm could be given the whole barn, which was a building 38x42 feet with 16 feet posts, was one mass of roaring and seething flames, which was mounting twenty feet in the sky and threatening the house, carriage house and shop, all of which were within twenty-feet of the fire. But the neighbors soon rallied and by the prompt use of buckets confined the fire to the barn which was totally consumed with all its contents, consisting of two horses, nine cows, one hog, thirty tons of hay, one hay wagon loaded with hay, a tip-cart, two sets of double harness, five sets of single harness and all the haying and farming tools. An attempt was made to release the animals, one horse being nearly saved when the flames overcame him and he perished with the rest. The barn had large double doors facing east and west, and both being open created a strong draft which spread the fire instantly all over the building. Within three-quarters of an hour of the time it was first seen the building had fallen in, but continued to burn brightly nearly all night, completely consuming everything that was combustible. Of the hay cart which stood in the floor all that could be seen of it was the tires and other iron work. The shop was on fire several times and the house was badly blistered, but by the liberal use of the water from the well, 150 feet distant, no greater damage was done. A large windmill, for pumping water into a tank in the barn, went down in the flames, only the iron work being left. No alarm was given in Peabody, about three miles away, although the light was seen by a number, among whom was Chief Tibbetts, but all thought the fire was farther away. It would have taken from twenty to twenty-five minutes to have got the apparatus to the scene, and then the nearest water which could be reached by an engine was a mile away. After the building fell in the water in the well gave out. There is no doubt but what the fire was the work of an incendiary as no light or matches had been used about the place, and several persons were in the barn a half hour before the fire and found everything all right then. The loss will reach about $3700, divided as follows: Barn and windmill, $1000; live stock, $1000; hay, $700; tools, wagons, harnesses, etc., $1000. The barn was insured in the South Danvers Mutual for $500 and in the Merrimac Mutual of Andover for $300, the latter being placed through the agency of O. B. Chadwick & Co. The barn had just been newly painted and shingled. Mr. Needham is the man from whom railroad bonds and mining stocks to the amount of $30,000 were stolen some two years ago, but were afterwards restored to him. He has his suspicions as to the incendiary and the police are at work investigating it. This is the second incendiary fire in that section this summer, and no alarm was given in town for either. Had there been a hand engine in the vicinity the fire might have been checked by the aid of water in the different wells.

It is said that Hose 3 are forming a polo team.

An alarm of fire in Salem Wednesday night about 11.30 brought the boys out lively.

Chief Osborne of Salem and Harvey of North Adams with quite a number of Salem firemen visited the Central Station Wednesday evening about 9 o'clock.

A member of Steamer No. 5 of Cambridge was in town Monday looking around for fire relics. He has the greatest collection of pictures of the different makes of steam fire engines in the country, having one of about every kind ever manufactured.

Steamer 2 at their meeting Monday evening voted to go down the harbor some day not far distant, and a committee was appointed to make all necessary arrangements.

The Supreme Court law term at Concord, N. H., Friday, gave opinions in about seventy cases. Wheeler vs. Phœnix Insurance Company was an action to recover $10,000 for loss of a woolen mill in Salem, N. H. There was a clause in the policy that if the insured should keep benzine or naphtha the policy should be void. The defense was that the plaintiff used naptha to kill moths in wool in his factory in violation of the policy, and that the fire was caused by the naphtha. At the trial of the case before a jury, they found that the fire was not caused by the naphtha, and that its use in such mills was both necessary and customary. Held that, it being necessary and customary the company insured it in view of that, and judgment was ordered for the plaintiff, Justices Doe and Smith dissenting.

The Board of Engineers will hold their regular meeting this evening.

Chief Goodhue of Beverly was in town Sunday looking over the furnishing of the Central Station with a view of furnishing the new station in Beverly.

Steamer 2 is on duty this month and Steamer 1 will respond at the second alarm.

Last Thursday the dedication of the Rebecca Nourse Monument at the old homestead in Danvers took place. A large company of friends and descendants were present at the First Church at the Centre. In the pulpit were the pastor, Rev. C. B. Rice, Rev. Fielder Israel of the First Church, Salem, Rev. W. G. Sperry of the South Church, Peabody, and Benjamin B. Nourse of Westboro, Vice President of the Association and acting President in the absence of President Benj. F. Nourse of Boston. The exercises at the church consisted of an organ voluntary by Mr. Verry, reading by Rev. Mr. Rice. Anthem by the choir, prayer by Rev. W. G. Sperry, an address by Rev. Mr. Israel, Rev. Mr. Rice, and benediction by Rev. Mr. Israel. After the exercises a collection of $57.72 was taken to go toward fencing and endowing the monument lot. After a basket lunch which was enjoyed in the vestry the company formed in procession and marched to the little burying ground on the estate of Orrin Putnam, where Rebecca Nourse was buried. The monument is a substantial one, the base and cap being made from Rockport granite and the die of Quincy granite polished on its four sides. It is about nine feet above the ground. It was designed by Walter B. Nourse of Worcester, and built by N. P. Clark of Salem, for $350 and the cost of the whole, including foundation $527.52. On the face of the monument are the words

REBECCA NOURSE.
YARMOUTH, ENGLAND
1621
SALEM MASS
1692

O Christian martyr who for truth could die
When all about thee owned the hideous lie!
The world redeemed from Superstition's sway
Is breathing freer for thy sake to-day.

The verse was written by John G. Whittier. On the opposite side are the words

Accused of witchcraft she declared, "I am innocent, and God will clear my innocency."

Once acquitted, yet falsely condemned, she suffered death July 19, 1692.

In loving memory of her Christian character, even then fully attested by forty of her neighbors, this monument is erected.

The ceremony of dedication consisted of an invocation by Rev. Dr. Bolles of Salem. Reports of the Treasurer of the monument committee. A response by the President of the Association, accepting the monument, reading of letters from John G. Whittier, by W. P. Upham, prayer of dedication by Rev. Hiram Putnam of Andover, singing of the doxology by the company and benediction by Rev. Mr. Israel. The whole programme was successfully carried out.

The Beverly correspondent of the Salem Telegram gives a very good account of a romantic wedding which took place at Rial Side, last Tuesday evening. The contracting parties were Mr. J. Herbert Ellis of Peabody, and Miss Eveline Kenney, of Salem, who are spending the summer here. The ceremony was performed under a large marquis tent. About twenty-five friends were present. Rev. Mr. Butler of the Unitarian Church united the couple. The sides of the tent were removed, leaving simply a canopy, and the floor was carpeted with white cloth, while the interior was trimmed with wreaths of leaves and wild flowers. The service was a peculiarly appropriate one for the occasion, Rev. Mr. Butler remarking that the surroundings were the most romantic of any wedding at which he ever officiated.

NORTH PEABODY.

Died July 26, Mary, daughter of Jeremiah and Mary Loftus.

Mr. W. P. Barke has made numerous improvements in his place on Andover street, such as painting the exterior and interior, also building a fence on the street and otherwise improving it.

During our numerous showers recently the yards on Andover street have received serious washouts on account of the horse railroad laying their track in the gutter and completely filling it up in places, making the yards almost impassable. We trust this will be remedied shortly.

Last Saturday night the hoodlums capped the climax by trying to run the last car from Salem, and using indecent language on the cars which induced the company to have the offenders arrested and brought into court Monday and two were fined $10 and costs and one was discharged.

CATARRH.

BY A. P. LIGHTHILL, M. D.

The earliest symptoms of Catarrh is a discharge from the head, consisting sometimes of a clear acid fluid, but oftener of a thick, fœtid, purulent yellow or greenish matter which is usually secreted in excessive abundance, and discharged through the nostrils for throat, and frequently by both channel.

The nature of this discharge varies in different cases, and even in the same individual at different times. In some it is copious, and of a loose or fluid character, while in others it is very viscid or gummy, adhering to the diseased membrane with glue-like tenacity; often this offensive matter concretes in dry, hard masses of crusts, which obstruct breathing and are very difficult to detach, their dislodgment requiring most violent efforts. Sometimes these incrustations come away in lumps of a deep green tint, but occasionally in broad and flat casts of a notable size, on which traces of blood may at times be observed. This condition is very liable to run to serious ulceration, involving a loss of the bony structure of the nose and a subsequent flattening of that organ, and is invariably accompanied by a breath of exceedingly fœtid and sickening odor. In some cases it becomes so revoltingly offensive as to render the sufferer an object of disgust to himself as well as to others.

The nasal membrane is thickened and congested, causing the nose to be stopped up, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other, and often on both, giving rise to a disagreeable, stuffy sensation in the head, and occasionally to violent paroxysms of sneezing.

A feeling of fullness, heat, irritation, soreness or pain is generally experienced in the nostrils, near the root of the nose, as well as in the upper part of the throat, above and below the soft palate. A distressing sensation of heavy weight or compression is usually complained of over the forehead, especially in the region immediately above and between the eyes. Sometimes the pain is obstinately fixed in one particular part, as in the temples, on top of the head, at the back of the neck, or behind the orbits; and occasionally it manifests itself in the face, of so severe a character that it is frequently mistaken for neuralgia.

The voice is generally affected, and becomes hoarse, weak and uneven, assuming a nasal character, or an unpleasant sniffling quality. Cough of variable severity is not unfrequently one of the symptoms and results of Catarrh.

The sense of smell is generally blunted or entirely lost, and a similar effect on taste may be occasionally observed. The eyes are apt to become irritable, and disposed to water excessively on exposure to the cold or wind, and a sense of weariness of sight is usually experienced after slight exertions. Hearing becomes frequently more or less impaired, and noises in the head very often add materially to the existing distress.

The stomach generally suffers more or less, and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious, and nearly always bad in the morning.

The patient often complains of lassitude and fatigue, an incapacity for either physical for mental exertions, and a constant disposition to drowsiness and sleep. The mental faculties are also sometimes slightly affected, loss of memory being not unfrequently experienced.

Catarrh may prove fatal, either by debilitating the system and wearing out the patient, or by travelling downward and producing consumption. This fact has been so repeatedly noticed that all experienced practitioners now look upon Catarrh as one of the earliest manifestations of this dreaded complaint. Among educated physicians in this or any other country, Dr. Lighthill was the first to devote his study and investigation to the cure of Catarrh and kindred diseases, and the happy results which attended his labor have been attested to by many of the most prominent citizens of Boston and vicinity. Cases abandoned as hopeless by other physicians have promptly yielded to his painless and effective treatment.

ASTHMA

For years Dr. Lighthill has made this distressing disease his special study, investigating carefully the causes that produce it; his labor was fully rewarded, for he not only established its true pathological condition, but also discovered a new and correct system of treatment for its cure. Hundreds of cases who have been under his care have found permanent relief from this wonderful discovery, from the beginning of this treatment prompt benefit is experienced which is ultimately followed by a complete and radical cure.

An experience of 30 years of constant practice enables Dr. Lighthill to decide on the first examination as to the cureability of any disease within specialty, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless the chances are for favorable results. His specialty comprises the cure of and [illegible] of the Nervous system from whatever cause.

John W. Ehninger has executed in clay a perfect model of a toboggan with a lady and gentlemen seated upon it in the attitude assumed when in full motion. The model is mounted on an inclined base of wood, representing the slope of a toboggan slide and painted to resemble the clay. The expression of the faces is natural, and every outline is a marvel of perfection.

Drunkenness is increasing in Peabody, owing, no doubt, to "the letting up" of the officers in the prosecution of the illegal venders in intoxicating liquors.—Beverly Citizen.

You are wrong, brother, our officers are as vigilant as ever and no liquor is sold openly in town. There is an increase of drunkenness by those who get their liquor in Salem and then come home to sober off. However, there is one thing the police seem to have "let up" on, and that is the arresting of every drunken man seen on the streets. On a recent Sunday, fourteen intoxicated people passed through one of our streets where an officer was supposed to be on duty, but no arrests were made.

Business generally was suspended in town last Saturday and our streets put on a holiday appearance. The stores were all closed from 12 to 6, and a Sunday quiet prevailed in some parts of the town. The South Church bell was tolled for an hour and the flag placed at half mast. On Friday the soldier's monument was very neatly trimmed with black goods, 180 yards having been bought for the purpose. The Women's Relief Corps of the G. A. R. having decided to pay for it and numerous citizens volunteered to assist in putting it in place, with the above result, making one of the prettiest displays in this vicinity. It remained over Sunday and was removed Monday by Mr. Calvin Percei.

An economical crank writing for an exchange says, "the idea of burying the dead in an upright position in order to save room in grave yards," is gaining ground. Many a long day is likely to elapse before the sign, "standing room only" is placed along side of "keep off the grass" in our cemeteries.

The large front windows of the Warren National Bank were handsomely draped, showing a fine picture of Gen. Poet's Corner.

He did His Level Best.

BY H. S. KELLER.

No matter if his skin be black,
Or if his skin be white;
He is a man of honest heart,
Provided he is right.
Though lowly be his task on earth,
His future will be blest,
While others reached to highest aim,
He did his level best.

No civic honors may attend
The tiller of the soil;
No grand ambition win him from
The paths of common toil;
Yet, when the silken cord is cut,
And he lies down to rest,
The chaplet fame nor grander is—
He did his level best.

Though humblest soldier in the ranks
Promotion does not meet,
May shame the man of golden bars
Win victory from defeat.
Though laid away in shallow trench,
Arms folded on his breast,
Man's verdict is not history;
He did his level best.

God bless the man of lowly lot
Who sweetens life with toil,
Who eats the bread that honest won
Amid the great turmoil;
No poet pen may sing his praise
When he is laid to rest;
An epitaph more worthy is:
He did his level best.

The Dead Poet's Creed.

VICTOR HUGO.

My soul drinks in its future life
Like some green forest thrice cut down,
Whose shoots defy the axmen's strife,
And skyward spread a greater crown.

While sunshine guides my aged head,
And bounteous earth supplies my food,
The lambs of God their soft light shed,
And distant worlds are understood.

Say not my soul is but a clod,
Resultant of my body's powers,
She plumes her wings to fly to God,
And will not rest outside His powers.

The winter snows are on my brow,
But summer suns more brightly glow
And violets, lilacs, roses, now
Seem sweeter than long years ago.

As I approach my earthly end,
Much plainer can I hear afar,
Immortal symphonies which blend
To welcome me from star to star.

The tomb is not an endless night;
It is a thoroughfare—a way
That closes in a soft twilight
And opens in eternal day.

Moved by the love of God, I find
That I did work as did Voltaire,
Who loved the world and all mankind,
But God is love! Let none despair!

Our work on earth is just begun,
Our monuments will later rise,
To bathe their summits in the sun
And shine in bright eternal skies.

Stealing Dimples.

I was going to kiss the dimples from out
the little cheeks,
Where they ripple and they dance every time she laughs and speaks;
She said I shouldn't do it, but I held her fast and tight,
And kissed and kissed the rosy little face with all my might.

And then a pair of eyes twinkled very gravely out,
And a pair of little lips gathered up a
doleful pout,
With little drooping corners—no wonder,
you will say,
To see such bonny, bonny dimples stolen
all away.

I thought I should have kept them for just a little while;
But little teeth were soon peeping through a little smile,
And then a laugh like sunshine was over all her face,
And every dimple I had stolen was back again in place.

A Sequence.

We were married—she and I—
In the spring;
Said she, as we settled down
In our cottage in the town,
"Love, we now begin life's reign,
And of this, our small domain,
You are king."

And a happier man than I
Ne'er was seen.
And the future seemed to be
Ever full of bliss to me,
As I told my fairy wife,
"Of my fortunes and my life
You are queen."

Then her mother in our home
Took her place,
And this life became to me
Full of woes and misery.
Though I dare not raise a fuss,
From the day she came to us,
She was ace.

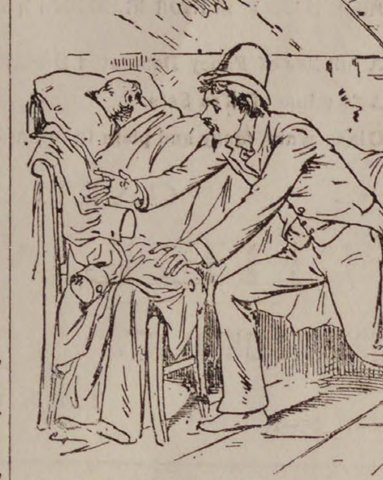
IT IS said that Noah Porter, president of Yale College, is superintending a revision of Webster's Dictionary. Could he stand on the corner of our streets some night he would hear lots of new and convenient words that have never been in an edition of Webster's.

A PARIS MYSTERY.

under suspicion. The daughter of Mouton, the janitor at No. 13 Passage de Mazarin, is said to have given evidence to the effect that, about 10 o'clock on Monday night, the hour at which the crime seems to have been committed, she saw a young man, 'tallish, slenderly-built, and light of foot-step,' glide through the passage of the house as if on his way upstairs. The police will, of course, make every effort to trace this young man, but, in the absence of clearer testimony, their task must be pronounced one of the greatest difficulty. Meantime, the judge of instruction has opened his inquiry on the spot; and a reward of 5,000 francs has been offered by the prefect of police for such information as may lead to the arrest of the assassin."

I read this paragraph slowly through; its every word seemed to fall on me like a great weight added to an already heavy burden. I feared, but that was not enough—I wanted certainty. Hurrying up the Rue Dauphine, I mounted the stairs and listened at the door of Raoul's room. From his slow, regular respiration I judged him to be asleep; could he sleep, and—no! I would not believe it, would not think it! Yet, for all that, I dared not open the door, walk straight up to my friend, and tell him what I had seen. I took off my shoes on the threshold, and crept into the room like a thief.

Raoul did not speak to me; he must therefore be asleep. The room was quite dark. I groped my way to the corner where the clothes which Raoul had last worn lay heaped together on a chair. I felt for the shirt sleeves; the one I took up first had the ivory button at the wrist, round and smooth. The buttonholes of the other were both empty; I dropped it with a smothered groan of anguish—then listened, catching my breath, to see whether Raoul did not awake. He slept on. I laid on the table the newspaper I had bought, folded so that the paragraph about the murder lay uppermost; put beside it in a little pile all that remained of Levi Jacob's money, and stole softly from the room.



The button holes of the other were both empty.

I had meant to fly at once and forever from the Rue Dauphine. But no sooner had I closed the door of Raoul's room behind me than the impulse left me. How could I desert my friend? Even if he were—even if he were what I dreaded to think, ought I to leave him? Would he in such a case have abandoned me? I leaned my head against the damp wall of the staircase, and, I am not ashamed to say, sobbed to think of it. What could I believe but that all was true? There was that damning evidence at the Morgue there was all that had happened since my parting with Raoul at ten o'clock on Monday night—the hundred trivial details that joined their several forces and drove the mind to such a terrible conclusion. But Raoul?—of all men, he? Was I to trust my reason or my friendship? A cruel alternative! I shook as if with a fit of ague; I felt thoroughly worn out in mind and body. Was I to go or stay? I sat down on the stairs and buried my face in my hands.

I do not know how long I sat there; I was careless of the time, as of the cold. To leave Raoul was like a treason; but to meet him—to face him with such thoughts in my mind!—rather anything than that! It was now late. Seven o'clock was the hour we had fixed for dinner; it must be long after that; already the restaurant people must have sent in our meal. Raoul might rise at any moment—might come out—he must not find me here! I rose, staggered downstairs and rushed along the passage.

A stout man, muffled up in a great, black cravat, stretched his arm across the outer doorway to prevent my reaching the street. Almost beside myself, in blind rage at this obstacle, I raised my arm and dealt him a violent blow on the chest. He reeled back, but as he did so whistled shrilly and grasped me by the sleeve. Two men rushed forward, and in a moment held me fast.

"Ho, ho!" said the stout man with the cravat; "we assault the agents of police? We raise our hands against the authorities, eh! Here Jacquot, Bertrand! Bring this fine fellow under the light of the lamp there, that I may have a look at him! . . . Short, fair, blue eyes—no, it is not our man. You may let him go. And, young jackanapes, let me warn you——"

But no sooner had the two men loosed their hold of me than I had fled like a coward, and, before the stout man had finished his sentence, was half way down the Rue Dauphine.

CHAPTER V.

To make my narrative clear, I shall give you, before going further, the result of the first day's inquiry held on Wednesday, the day of my visit to the Morgue. The judge of instruction in this case was M. Robert Roguet, a man of high reputation in the magistracy. From M. Sapinaud, advocate, and a friend of mine, I obtained a copy of the judge's notes later on in the case; I give them here.

The inquiry was held "on the spot"—that is, in the very room of the house No. 13 Passage de Mazarin, where Joseph Meissner had been murdered.

Jean Mouton, janitor, interrogated, gave evidence: That he had held his present situation for more than 14 years, and that the murdered man, Meissner, had occupied that room and cabinet for at least ten years. Interrogated as to the habits of Joseph Meissner, declared that these were regular in the extreme; that he always breakfasted in his room; on three days of the week went out at noon, returning at 4, and going out again at 6 to dine; on the other days remained in his room till 6, his invariable hour for dinner; returning every night, without exception, on the stroke of 9. Had returned at 9 o'clock on the night of Monday. Tuesday being one of the days on which he never stirred out of doors till 6, he, Mouton, had not been surprised or alarmed by his non-appearance up to that hour. Stated that Meissner had repeatedly enjoined him to force an entrance into his room any day that he did not appear at 6 o'clock. Interrogated as to whether he knew what motive Meissner could have for giving so singular an order, replied that he was unable to guess, unless it were a fear of what had actually happened—namely, of being murdered in his room.

Francois Bastoul, publican, gave evidence as to the finding of the body in exact agreement with Mouton's statement to the police.

Leon Ledru, superintendent of the bureau of police, Rue des Saints Peres, stated that at twenty minutes past seven on Tuesday evening Jean Mouton, janitor, presented himself at the bureau and gave information of the murder. He, Ledru, taking with him the officers Lambert and Regnaud, thereon accompanied the janitor, Mouton, to the house No. 13 Passage de Mazarin, where they found the sieur Francois Bastoul awaiting them outside the door of this room. Bastoul assured them that the door had been unopened previous to their arrival. On opening the door, they found the dead body of Meissner lying close by his writing chair, as if he had fallen from it on being struck. The body was cold and rigid. Beside it was found a dagger of foreign manufacture, stained with blood, and a wrist-stud of ivory, with the initial G. on it. These articles were now at the Morgue. Had examined the various lock-fast places in the room. Nearly all of these were open; one or two had their locks forced; the most had apparently been opened by their proper keys, a bunch of which was found hanging in one of the locks. Most of the drawers, strong-boxes, etc., bore evidence of having been ransacked to the bottom; but if any valuables had been removed, treasure to a very large amount had been left behind. He, the superintendent, had drawn up an inventory of articles of value found in the several lock-fast places before sealing up these receptacles. This inventory comprised drafts to a large amount on the Bank of France and the Credit Lyonnais; rentes, three and five per cents; the titles of real estate in Paris, Amiens and Provins; railway and mining script; a number of gold watches, articles of jewelry, and precious stones cut and uncut; and sums of money in French and foreign gold, estimated at not less than 45,000 francs. This inventory Superintendent Ledru handed in to the judge of instruction, together with a sealed parcel containing the books and papers of the murdered man.

The officers Lambert and Regnaud corroborated the testimony of their chief as to the finding of the body. Both agreed in the opinion that Meissner had been stabbed while sitting at his writing table, and had then fallen from his chair to the ground. Lambert stated further that, having been ordered to examine the cabinet or small bed-closet off the sitting-room, he had found the window wide open; also that the marks of muddy boots could be traced on the floors of both rooms.

Dr. Cosse stated that, at the request of Superintendent of Police Ledru, he had visited this place last night, and made an examination of the corpse of Joseph Meissner. Death had resulted from a stab under the right shoulder-blade, which had perforated the lung and caused a copious hemorrhage. The rush of blood to the mouth would doubtless choke the unfortunate man, and prevent his uttering any cry. Death, if not instantaneous, would immediately follow the infliction of the wound. Had been shown the foreign-looking dagger found beside the corpse, and had satisfied himself that with this weapon, and no other, the mortal blow must have been struck. The blade of the dagger was three-edged, exactly fitting the orifice in the clothes and in the body of the deceased. Interrogated as to the hour when he had seen the corpse, Dr. Cosse stated that he had arrived on the spot at about 8:15 o'clock. Asked as to whether he could form an opinion as to the time when the murder had been committed, replied that, from the appearance of the body, he should suppose life to have been extinct for at least 12 hours. The fact that the blood from the wound had completely soaked into the wood of the floor made 24 hours a still more likely period.

Dr. A. de Bourdon, surgeon at the Hotel Dieu, concurred in the evidence of Dr. Cosse. The fatal wound had certainly been dealt with the dagger found beside the corpse. It was a flesh wound, inflicted at a distance of an inch and a half below the right clavicle, and avoiding all contact with the dorsal vertebra. Death from such a wound, in the case of an old man like the deceased, would probably ensue in about five minutes' time. From the appearance of the body and the coagulated blood, had little hesitation in saying that the wound had been inflicted late on Monday night or early on Tuesday morning.

The janitor, Mouton, recalled and re-examined, answered as follows:

Q. Your room opens from the passage leading into the courtyard of this house?

A. Yes.

Q. Your room has a glazed door?

A. Yes.

Q. So that one can see, from the janitor's room, every person who enters the courtyard from the Passage de Mazarin, or vice versa?

A. Yes, if one is looking out.

Q. Naturally. You have already stated that Meissner's habit was to return home punctually at nine o'clock. Did you observe him pass your door at that hour Monday night?

A. He came into the room on Monday night at that hour to take his key and his candle before going upstairs.

Q. As all your tenants are in the habit of doing?

A. Certainly.

Q. And this was the last occasion on which you saw Joseph Meissner alive?

A. The last.

Q. Now, can you tell me with any certainty what persons passed your door going into the court between nine and ten o'clock?

A. I am certain that no one passed between nine and half-past nine excepting M. Stanislas.

Q. And who is M. Stanislas?

A. One of the tenants on the fourth floor. He came in about a quarter-past nine, took his key, and wished me good-night.

Q. And you are certain no one else passed, up to half-past nine?

A. Perfectly certain.

Q. Why do you say half-past nine?

A. Because at that hour I went out.

Q. Where?

A. First to the shoemaker's, Rue de Biche, to fetch a pair of boots belonging to one of the tenants. Then to the wine-shop at the corner of the Rue St. Andre, kept by M. Bastoul, where I met two of my friends, with whom I played several games of dominoes; returning home about ten minutes past eleven.

Q. You then closed the outer door of your passage for the night?

A. Yes.

Q. Your usual hour for doing so is eleven?

A. Yes, but on Monday night I was a quarter of an hour later.

Sophie Mouton, aged 13 years, daughter of the janitor, stated that on the night of Monday she was alone in the janitor's room from the time when her father went out until his return. Interrogated as to whether she had seen any one go along the passage, besides the tenants who came in for their keys, replied that she had. Chancing to arise her eyes for an instant from her needlework, and to look through the glazed door, she had observed the figure of a man glide swiftly along the passage. It took but a second for the figure to pass; but in that second she remarked, or thought she remarked, that the man was young, tallish, slenderly built, and light of footstep. The man wore a low-crowned hat, and, she thought, was wrapped in a cloak; but on this latter point she could not speak with certainty. Interrogated as to the time when this took place, she could make no definite statement. Was it an hour after her father went out? It might have been an hour. Was it half an hour after he went out? It might have been that; she could not say. Had she heard 10 o'clock strike? Yes, she had heard it. Was it before or after the hour struck that the man went along the passage? She could not remember; she had attached no importance to the incident; had thought that the man must be a friend of one of the tenants, visiting him by appointment. Again pressed to say whether it was before or after 10 that the man passed her door, the child Sophie Mouton burst into tears, protesting that she could not remember; and so her examination closed.

Jules Pernet, the tenant occupying the room adjoining that of Meissner, interrogated, gave evidence: That on Monday night, while engaged on his work as a copyist of manuscript, he had heard a dull sound, such as might be caused by a falling body of some weight, apparently coming from Meissner's room. Had thought that his neighbor must have let fall on the floor a large and heavy book, or overturned some article of furniture. Thereafter had heard a noise of footsteps in the room, and had remarked it as something unusual, his neighbor being always very quiet. Could not say precisely at what time he had heard the sound of the falling body, but thought it must have been about ten. The noise in Meissner's room had attracted his notice because it was unusual; the tolling of the bells at ten o'clock, though much louder, had been quite unmarked by him; he was accustomed to it, and, busy over his mechanical work as copyist, paid no attention to it. Pressed to give a conjectural answer, refused, repeating that he was quite unable to say whether the sound had been heard by him before or after the striking of ten o'clock.

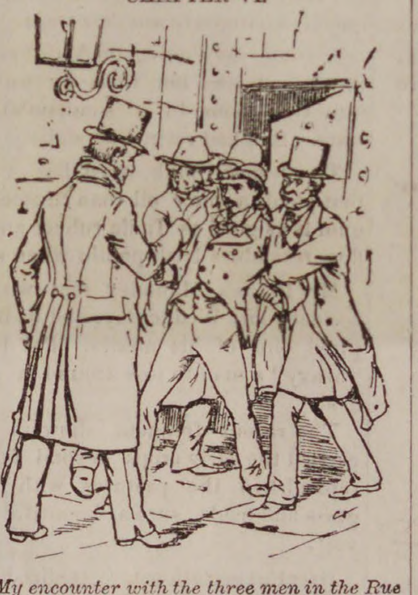
The janitor, Mouton, recalled and re-examined, stated that the keys of the tenants hung on a rack in his room, with the candlestick of each above. The candles were brought down from the upper rooms each morning; there being no light in the staircase, the tenants were accustomed to light them in his room before going upstairs at night. During winter one candle would serve Meissner for two nights; the one he took upstairs with him on the night of Monday had lasted three. He, Mouton, had remarked on this in handing the candle to Meissner, making a joke about it. There was enough left of the candle, he thought, to burn for perhaps an hour and a half—not more. Had been shown the long dagger found beside the corpse; had never seen any such weapon in the possession of the deceased.

Auguste Kosinski, restaurant keeper, Rue de Vaugirard, stated that he was proprietor of the restaurant at which the deceased Joseph Meissner regularly dined. His hour of arrival was at 6:15, and he invariably left at 7:15. On the evening of Monday he had left the restaurant at his usual hour.

Samuel Koch, waiter at the Cafe Voltaire, stated that the deceased Joseph Meissner came to that cafe every evening at about 7:30, and sat for above an hour over a cup of coffee, reading the financial journals. On the evening of Monday Meissner had left the cafe at about 8:45, his usual hour.

Note by the judge of instruction: The janitor, Mouton, may now be released from surveillance, there being nothing to connect him in any way with the crime.

CHAPTER VI.



My encounter with the three men in the Rue Dauphine.

After my encounter with the three men in the Rue Dauphine, I rushed on aimlessly through the snow, down one street, along another, not caring whither I went. I was for the time incapable of thinking connectedly. No friendship could have been closer than that between Raoul and myself. Since our first meeting, four years ago, we had literally lived our life in common. He was in most things my superior, but he himself did not think so. Our confidence in one another had been perfect; I thought I knew him to the bottom of his soul. Now that I was forced to believe him a criminal, a murderer—can you wonder that it should have seemed to me almost as if the world had suddenly come to an end—as if a great, black gulf had yawned open at my feet, and all the joy and beauty of life lay now and forever behind me?

Again the thought came to me, had I done my duty to my friend? was I doing it now? Raoul was guilty; it seemed impossible to doubt it. But still, he was my friend. He had killed this man, but did I know the provocation he might have received? What had I intended in placing the money and the warning paragraph on the table, that he might see them when he awoke? It had been a way of saying, "Fly, escape, hide yourself while there is time; I cannot bring myself to look you in the face, but this much I have done for you." But was that enough? Should not I have gone to him and spoken and urged him to fly? Should I not have helped him out of his danger? Might not the warning I had given be in vain? Might it not have come too late? Great heaven, it had been too late! That man who had stopped me as I fled from the house—I had not realized the truth at the time, nor till now—that man was an agent of police! now that I thought of it, he had said so! Already Raoul was arrested, and through my fault! I despised myself; I execrated my cowardice; I felt like the murderer of my friend. At once, without a moment's hesitation, I turned on my steps and hastened back to the Rue Dauphine.

"Here is the key of Monsieur!" cried Pierre after me, as I hurried past his door. "M. Girard has gone out."

"Gone out?" I repeated, mechanically.

"Yes, with a gentleman who called for him—a stout gentleman, a friend of M. Girard's," he said. "He was upstairs with M. Girard for some time; then they went out together, not ten minutes ago."

I did not need to hear more. Sad at heart I went upstairs and entered our garret-room. On the table stood the dinner from Magny's, the two bottles of wine untouched. Beside the tray, just where I had placed them, lay the evening newspaper and the little pile of money. The drawers of the bureau I noticed were half pulled out. I looked into them. My papers had been left; Raoul's were all taken away.

The fire had gone out, but I did not think of rekindling it. I did not want comforts which Raoul could not share. For long I sat at the table, a prey to my wretched thoughts, until the sudden leaping up of the expiring candle warned me of the lapse of time. My snow-drenched clothes made me shiver in every limb; I hastily undressed and threw myself into bed. There, from sheer fatigue of mind and body, I must have slept; since I remember no more until the servant awoke me next morning.

Pierre greeted me as usual: the news of Raoul's arrest was, therefore, not yet published. I sent him, however, for a newspaper, that I might learn the latest development of the case.

The Figaro had a long paragraph, headed as usual, "The Crime of Christmas-day." It stated that no arrest had yet been made, but that the police were understood to have found a clew and to be now on the track of the assassin. It commented on the mysterious character of the crime. "One of the chief difficulties of the case," said the writer, "is the apparent want of motive in the proceedings of the unknown murderer. No doubt the deceased Joseph Meissner had a dangerous reputation for wealth; possibly, from the nature of his business, he may have had enemies. But if plunder was the motive for the deed, why did the assassin, who seems to have been quite unhurried, leave behind him valuables like those mentioned in the police inventory—money, trinkets and jewels, which could have been so easily carried away? On the other hand, if revenge and not robbery was the motive, why should the assassin ransack those lock-fast places, breaking into some, opening others—overturning everything; and apparently taking nothing? A theory to explain this contradiction has yet to be found."

Here was a point. I tried to think it out calmly in connection with Raoul and his relations, so far as I knew them, to the murdered man. But all my pondering was in vain; I could find no theory. Only the stern facts confronted me.

The paragraph in The Figaro next went on to describe the articles exhibited at the Morgue, which, it seemed, were still attracting public curiosity. "These," it said, "are the real clew to the discovery of the criminal. The police have to lay their hands upon the individual who, on Monday night, dropped from his wrist that ivory button in the room of Joseph Meissner. They have to find, if possible, the other ivory button that makes the pair. In brief, they have to find the man G——, the owner of the dagger with which the crime was committed."

My hand so shook at I read this terrible paragraph that I could scarcely hold the paper. It was I who had been the first to find that single ivory button at Raoul's sleeve—and I had left it there!—I, his friend! I had had it in my power to destroy the evidence against him, and instead I had preserved it. Let him be guilty or not, it was not my part to deliver him up to justice; yet that was what I had done. I forced myself to read on.

"The dagger now being shown at the Morgue," continued the writer, "is of so singular a kind that no one who has once seen it could fail to identify it. It is of Japanese manufacture, the steel being specially fine, and the lacquering of the hilt being very rich and artistic. On one side of the blade is an inscription in the Japanese character; on the other side is the figure of a flower, with a single word beside it, also in the Japanese character. This word is stated, by a well-known Orientalist who has seen the weapon, to mean Illusion, and to have a religious significance. M. de St. Florent, the well-known private collector, writes us that the dagger of the Passage de Mazarin is not unique, as has been stated in several of the journals. M. de St. Florent possesses a weapon which is an exact counterpart of the one found beside the corpse of Joseph Meissner." The paragraph ended with the statement that next day the funeral of the murdered man was to take place from the Morgue.

I did not leave the house all that day; I shrank from doing so. If I went out, and if the news of Raoul's arrest were now generally known, as was possible, I should be assailed with questions from the numerous friends of both of us—questions which to me would be torture. I could do nothing, at least, I thought and thought, I read the newspaper reports over and over again, and could devise no measure which would be of any advantage to my unhappy friend. Indeed, the best service I could render him—so far as it seemed just then—was to keep out of the way. In trying to imagine a possible examination, I became aware that my evidence would not be in his favor.

This was by far the most wretched day I ever spent in my life. This forced inaction, the cruel anxiety about my friend, the remorse of my own conduct—which I painted, no doubt, in colors unduly dark—all these contributed to my misery. I lunched on what remained eatable of Magny's dinner—the dinner that had been ordered to celebrate the accepting of the comedy—and drank a bottle of wine. The day wore on with maddening tardiness; at length evening came and again I sent out Pierre for a journal. By this time, surely, the news of the arrest must have been made public. A glance at the paper showed me that it had.

The paragraph was headed, "Crime of Christmas day: Arrest of the Assassin," and ran thus:

"An arrest has now been made in the case of the Passage de Mazarin, and all the circumstances point to the conclusion that the police have laid their hands on the veritable murderer. The individual arrested on suspicion is a young man named Raoul Girard, student of law, residing at No. 28 Rue Dauphine, a nephew of the murdered man. Further information is at present withheld by the police. It may be stated, however, that the arrest was made at a late hour last night, and that the credit of it is entirely due to the Agent of Police Py. There is reason to believe that, but for the activity shown by this skillful and energetic officer, Girard, who was in hiding, would ere this have succeeded in effecting his escape."

I was reading this paragraph with feelings that may be imagined, when I was startled by a knocking at the door. I say "startled," because I was apprehensive at every moment of a visit from the agents of police. This time, however, it was only Pierre.

"A lady desires to see Monsieur," he said, and ushered in Madame Dumaine, the mother of Gabrielle.

One glance at her face showed me that she knew all.

"M. Marsal," she said, "come with me at once! For pity's sake don't refuse! I said that I would bring you—that I would not come back without you. I beg—I implore of you to come!"

"But where?"—I had a confused notion that she wished me to go with her to Raoul—"to the house of detention?"

"No, no! It is Gabrielle who sent me to bring you. 'Go to M. Marsal,' she said, 'go, dear mother, and say to him that Gabrielle Dumaine is in distress, and must see him to-night!' Ah, Monsieur, say that you will come!"

"I will come, since Mademoiselle wishes it. But——"

"That is enough," she said; "let us not lose a moment. I was unwilling to leave her even to come to you. The agents of police were with us this afternoon. Ah, it has been terrible!"

I felt the poor lady's hand shake in mine as I led her down the dark stair. At the outer door I gave her my arm; it was now freezing hard, and the pavement was like glass. Neither of us spoke another word; with the thought that was in our minds, what, indeed, could be said?

As we left the house, No. 28 Rue Dauphine, a man who had been standing in the shadow of a passage opposite crossed the street and followed us. I noticed this, and, taking the chance of looking back at the street corners, saw the man always behind us, keeping us in

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier and regulating medicine, is characterized by three peculiarities, namely:

1st: The combination of the various remedial agents used.

2d: The proportion in which the roots, herbs, barks, etc., are mixed.

3d: The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

The result is a medicine of unusual strength and curative power, which effects cures heretofore unequalled. These peculiarities belong exclusively to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are
